Bethought him that there was a ladder in his nearest neighbor's yard. To go for it, die and drag it to his own door, seemed but Work of a moment. But so long and theavy was it, that all James' strength was not sufficient to raise it to the roof. Thrice had he essayed it, when, as he The ladder went up in an instant; "In work!" cried Richard "In Aminute we may be too late!"

The well was near; and down into the joil; and in an incredibly short space of meamed; but still the fire raged. Ansther backet full, -another, -and another-drawn by James from the well, borne the ladder by Richard, and thrown thon the roof by Joseph—had been aplied before the flames were subdued. The united strength of the brothers had done—nor two, perhaps—had been safe-baceemplished by the three.

Meanwhile the flimes of Dencon Smith's mee had been extinguished, and of the church mothing was left but a shapeless beap of smoking, blazing ruins.

The brothers went together to the well house "Our task is done and I am chakted" and James, with much feel-ing. "With your help brothers, I have esved my house -our house, rather, for hijo, the old family mansion. What Science can I make to you, more than to envite you cordially to invite you to the house of your father, and cheer once more with pour presence and love, the house, which has been so dreary and
