But this is a sort of intellectual harem-life which is rather inconsistent with family culture. Not that we wish to convey the idea that there is to be no private reading and study-no books sacred to ourselves. Every one must have paths in literary fields that are silent to the tread of other footsteps; but in the family, mind and all its forms of action ought to be common: This is Nature's law--as much so as kindness, sympathy and love, with their retinne of graceful offices, are to be shared in by all the neurehold. It is a law, however, that is constantly violated. Few families have any intellectual ezercise in common. Aside from the familiar topics that constitute the staple chit-bustion in Hydrogen.
