GUR MOUNTAIN SOLDIERS,

Hurrah! hurrah! let traitor hearts And traitor hands be warv; Our country calls our eagle down From off her mountain eyry l

As chamless as the streams that leap Amid their granite ledges; As hardy as the pines that spring Around their mountain edges,

They come, the heroes of the North ! In all their gallant daring; The trusty bayonet and gun, The starry banner bearing,

As bright as when its beauty nerved Our fathers' hearts of iron ; As when, before its burning stars, Fled back the British Lion!

What if, with hands unused to hold The musket or the sabre, They looked for calmer scenes of toil, And humble fields of labor:

The simple garb of peaceful life-No coward spirits wore it; The wind that stirs the corn may rise, And drive the clouds before it.

Their country's sword! no quiet joys Could tempt them to refuse it ! The deathless courage in their hearts Shall teach them how to use it.

They leave not, conscript- like, their homes All dreary and benighted; The fire that glows within their hearts Was at their hearth-stones lighted!

The fairest scenes, the dearest eyes-They manfully resigned them : Their parting words, though brief and sad, Left prouder friends behind them.

And not unblessed they come; their brows Were kissed by saintly mothers; Fond wives will for their husbands pray, And sisters for their brothers

Our country's proudest story-Or if they die, their falling place Will be the field of glory!

Hurrah! hurrah! let traitor hearts And traitor hands be wary; Our country calls her eagle down, From off her mountain eyry.
