Amid Life's joys and sweetnesses, He stood, to woe foredoomed.

Your hands are free to toil, but his With unseen gyves were bound; in vain, With bitter tears and passion-throes, He strove against the chain.

Your feet, perchance, keep even time Along the pathways in the light; His, bruised and bleeding, oftimes strayed

Through dreary wilds of night. His was a human heart, like yours, How hath he loved and prayed and wept! While you were sleeping, what sad watch His wakeful spirit kept!

He loved all forms of truth and right; He worshipped goodness reverently; He would have followed were they led;— Alas! he was not free.

He lived alone, misunderstood: He wept to hear Christ's voice afar, But,—chide him not, for he was blind,— He could not find the Star!

If something holy in his life Was blighted just before it bloomed, Forbear your scorn, O, world ! and know, To this was he foredoomed.

The latest advices from China inform us through the medium of private letters, of the unprecedented career in that conntry of a young American, of this State, has reached a position which reminds one of the dim legends of Prester John.

About twelve years ago Edward Forrester, a country lad, born in Jefferson Co., in this State, decided, like a great many other boys, to go to sea. His friends opposed the idea, but of course, the love of ocean life was too strong to be resisted, "go down to the sea in ships." He was successful, and soon became the mate of a whaling ship, though then scarcely
