THE BATTLE AT CORINTH.

Cairo, Oct. 6, 1862. The battle or series of battles at Corinth on the 4th, 5th and 6th of October, when the full details come in, will prove the finest achievements of federal arms during the present war. We are told from all sources that our victory is complete, that the rebels are routed and demoralized, and that Rosecrans and Hurlbut are both in pursuit of the fugacious horde.

The attack did not come suddenly or unexpectedly. It has been known for weeks that an effort would be made to retake Corinth. The pride of the South and the pressing necessities of Price's army conspired to form a strong motive for the attempt.

Could Corinth be taken, Bolivar, Jackson, Trenton and Humbolt must fall in their turn, and West Tennessee be purged of federal invaders. Besides, it was known that the government had large commissary and quartermasters' stores there, which would furnish Price's ragged men with the essentials for standing the trenchant blasts that already begin to find their way down from the North.

To effect this desirable result, the rebels have been concentrating for several weeks. Nearly two weeks ago Lovell and Van Dorn marched up past Holly Springs with about fifteen thousand men to Ripley, at or near which place they formed a junction with Price.

This force was considered sufficient to take Corinth, as it was known that Buell had taken part of the troops from that point and that several regiments and batteries had been sent to Wright at Cincinnati. Furthermore, Grant had increased the garrison at Jackson from the same source.

The rebel plan was to march to Pochontas, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, cross the Hatchie river near there, pass on to Chevalia, twelve miles from Corinth, throwing out a column north to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, to tear up the track and thus cut off reinforcements from Jackson, when they would proceed to take the coveted prize at their leisure.

This plan was carefully carried out, and so sure of success were the rebels that they burned the bridge over the Hatchie after crossing over, not expecting to need it in retreat, and they furthermore wished to secure themselves from an attack by Hurlbut in their rear.

Friday evening they drove our pickets in and attached the freight train on the Mobile and Ohio road. It is believed the train succeeded in getting into Corinth. It consisted of twenty cars laden with commissary stores. They then tore up the track, about twelve miles from Corinth, and so the matter rested till Saturday morning.

Early in the morning Price made a fierce and determined attack on our right, near the entrance of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad to the town. This attack was intended as a feint, as the main body of the rebels under Van Dorn were on our left, concealed in the low ground behind College Hill. The ruse, however, did not succeed. The contest lasted until half past eleven o'clock A. M.

The enemy drove in our centre, and a large number of them penetrated to the Corinth House. The most desperate fighting took place in the public square of the town. It is said to be literally covered with the dead. Finally they were driven out at the point of the bayonet, and General Hamilton scented the centre with two regiments.

Van Dorn and Lovell made a most determined attack on the extreme left, near the Chevalia road. They led their men to the attack through the abatis. Two of their columns reached the ditch, and the other two stopped not fifty paces from it.

During their advance a perfect storm of grape and canister was poured upon them. When, however, despite the fierce resistance, they had reached the point above indicated, the Twenty-seventh Ohio and Eleventh Missouri made a charge on them. This was too much for their staggering columns. Many of them fell down, and, holding up their hands, begged for mercy. The Seventh Missouri, First Kansas and a Wisconsin regiment reached a break in the road, disembarked from the cars, marched to the scene of action, and cut their way through the enemy's lines and entered Corinth just as the battle closed. Price withdrew to the deep cut in the Memphis and Charleston road, and remained there till after dark Saturday evening, when he retreated to the hills between the forks of the Hatchie river. There is no doubt but that he intended a further movement in the same direction next day; but a movement had been made which effectually cut him off. Gen. Hurlbut had started from Bolivar at two o'clock on Saturday morning, and was now directly in his front, and in possession of the only road leading to Ripley.

Gen. Rosecrans also started in pursuit at daylight Sunday morning. Thus Price was all day yesterday between two fires, Hurlbut in his front and Rosecrans in his rear. The roar of artillery was distinctly heard yesterday at four P. M. at Bolivar and Corinth. What the result is is not yet known; but I am assured by high official authority that the results are glorious. The rebel dead are strewn along the road for five miles from Corinth to where they had a hospital. They have lost two general officers. One, lying in the square at Corinth, very much mutilated, bears the description of Breckinridge. We had this afternoon over one thousand prisoners at Corinth, and more were coming in.

The census returns of 1860 gives the following statistics of slavery in the Indian Territories: Choctaws, 2,297 slaves; Cherokeees, 2,504 slaves; Creeks, 1,651 slaves; Chickasaws, 917 slaves. One of the Choctaw planters is the owner of 226 slaves, and ten of the largest planters of that tribe average 64 each. Among the Cherokeees the largest planter owns 57 slaves, and the ten largest average 43 each. Among the Chickasaws, the largest planter owns 61 slaves, the ten largest average 27 1/2 each.
