At bloody Fredericksburg he fell ;-Perhaps your son or brother lay Beside him on the field that day.

He died, before our banner's stars, Aflame with Freedom's deathless light, Flashed o'er the world their glory bright

He died, before the martyr-blood That veins our flag with life's red hue, Meant more than "Freedom to the few."

We blest our dear ones, when they went, With faltering lins and eyes grown dim But no one wept or prayed for him.

His grandsire fought against us, once; So Robert vowed, his eyes sflame, Hishearts-blood should blot out the shame

Look, Mother England, o'er the seal A son of thine, who loved thee well, At Freedom's feet, that morning fell.

He fought for Liberty and Truth ; His blood baptized our soil that day; Among our holy dead he lay.

Between us and all scorn of thine. Forevermore his soul shall stand Entreating for his native land !

The blood that veins our starry flag, Throbs in thy symbol Rose, as well, Since noble English Robert fell ! Eva. Feb. 1863.
