At the Union Meeting in Lewisville

last week, Mr. CRAYTON LEWIS sung the following original and appropriate song. It was greeted with applause : Come brothers, we're merry, I'll give you a toast

Merry, and witty; and wise;
May we live 'till the South has accomplished her boast, Healthy, and wealthy, and wise. She swore that our spirit she soon wo'd subduc And bring us around to the oligarch's view, So may we all live 'till this thing she can do, Healthy, and wealthy, and wise.

At present, we don't feel inclined to succumb, Nobody likes to, or tries,

We've still got free thot's and don't like to be

'Tis neither witty, nor wise,

MY FATHER.

[Written for Miss Mary Cory, of the town of Ulysses, Potter Co., Penn'a, on the death of her father.]

BY THIRZA.

My father sleeps the sleep of death Within the silent tomb, No ray of light illumes its night

Or penetrates its gloom.

The grave, his voice in silence hushed, No more its cheering tone, Like music, falls upon my ear, While here, below, I roam.

The lustre of his dark, keen eye Has faded from my view, The wintry blast of centh has dimmed,

That eye of lovliest hue: His mortal frame lies buried low Upon the green hill-side, And, angels o'er the verdant mound

On golden wings do glide: And 'round his bed, their vigils keep,

To guard his lifeless clay; While, to that realm of endless bliss, His spirit's flown away. Now, in that world where Jesus reigns,

He's cloth d in robes of white, Upon his head a crown of gold Shines forth with brightest light. But father, dear, thy sainted form

Is 'round me, day and night; And, oft', I know that thou art near To guide thy child aright; For when the sacred hour arrives

That's set apart for prayer, I hear thy gentle whisperings, "My child, for Heaven prepare." When I am summoned to depart.

And earth resigns her claim, O, may I, in that world above With thee, forever reign: And, with that blood bought throng on high My voice, there, may I raise,

To join the songs that seraphs sing In rapturozs notes of praise.
