DYING. How slowly from my tbrobbling veins Ebbs the red tide of life away; I wonder if my mother knows That I must die to-day?

The waving banners beckon, "On !" The cannons thunder, "To the fight !" I cannot lift my weary hands Even to cheer the Right.

I give my life, I have no more :-Take that for Freed om's sake, dear Barth Thank God for Truth, though woe and blood Announce her royal birth !

The battle strife sounds faint and far, The world is growing strangely dim; The robin in the door-yard tree Is chanting her sweet hymn.

Good-night ! I shall not smile again O. Mother | ao you know? Eva:
