BY MRS. ANNE C. L. WATERSTON.

On the wide battle-field, Or close to its edge, Stand we with tent-cloth, Cordage and wedge; Lift up the canvas, Stir up the straw. Have ready the cordials, Cooling draughts draw.

Bear in the wounded. Bend gently down; (Some mother's sons they are This day our own:)
Woman with soft touch Bathe this young brow; You with the strong arm Raise that soldier now.

A cup of cold water For him wounded sore-He asks if a brother Needs it not more. Look! on his dark skin Grim slave-scars are found, Where blood rushes red From the freedman's deep wound.

Few words are spoken-We bundage and feed Our soldiers and prisoners In perilous need. Comfort and light throw Over Death's passage, And for beloved ones Receive the last message.

Pale lips have attered Tranks for our care; Sel lom a groun is heard, Oft whispered prayer. Got and man aid us In work to be done, Till, through the struggle. Freddomgs won.
