THE REFUGEE.

A friend and I were strolling down The gay and crowded street,
When with a pale and sad-eyed one
It was our chance to meet.

My friend had bowed to ladies fair, Who passed and were forgot; He bowed to her, on his cheek I saw a crimson spot.

And yet it was no flush of shame Upon his cheek that burned; His look was soon as sad as hers: To look at her I turned,

Her years they might have been two sco Her step was sad and slow; Not weariness—but just that pace At which all mourners go.

Though poor, around her yet there was That nameless grace, which says, Eyen to careless passers by, "I have seen better days."

"Tell me," said I, "why you, who wear A soldier's name and sword, Changed color as she passed us by-Passed us without a word.

His eyes flashed flame. "My blood," he said, "It near to madness stirs To meet that sad, that patient one, And think what wrongs are hers.

"Two years ago-alas, how changed !-A fond, proud wife was she, And mother, too, of three fair sons Three fairer could not be.

"Her noble husband to his flag And to his country true, Was foully slain, at midnight, by A cruelitraitor crew.

"Slain, not in open, manly fight; But on his dwn hearth-stone She saw-his life blood ebb away, And heard his dying groan.

"She heard the troopers' curses deep Re-echo through the hall; She saw the lurid flames spread fast, She saw the roof-tree fall.

"When morning came, half crazed she stoo There desolate and lone, Gazing with tehrless eye apon A mass of whitened bone;

"All that was left of him whose love Had made her life so sweet Now mingled with the ashes of
