THE CAVALRY PICKET.

All day long, before the front, They had borne the skirmish brunt-Swift advance and sudden rally, Through the Shenandoah Valley.

But, at last, the blessed calm Of the evening fell, like balm, And they rested in the vap, on Lines of rifles, swords, and cannon.

With their bridles in their clasp, And their sabres in their grasp, Kept they thus each greenwood alley, In the Shenandoah Valley.

When, at once upon the breeze, From the woodlands and the leas, Rose a yell from Rebel pickets.

Then, with bridles tightly clasped. And with sabres firmly grasped, Waited they, with hearts enlarging, For the wild delight of charging.

And they listened, while that yell
