SLEIGH-BIDING LONG AGO. Hurrah for the Winter moonlight! White light on the drifted snow; Hurrah for the dear up country, Hurrah for the long ago l Old I featfully old, and cold But hurrah for the old man's treasures, The old man's memories of gold !

remember a Winter moodlight Of exceeding beauty, like this i Sang an audible song of bliss When the blue was so deep that my young eye Never dreamed of that land of delight, Which the old, over whom, it hangs lower, Forever, imagine in sight

There are stories of Paradise maidens That hemp-drunken sons of Islaam Hear, drowelly murmured by breezes. That rustle the whispering paim. There are tales of pure virgins whose finges. Hold gobiets of life-giving wine, Whom the dead, that die bravely in battle, Shall clasp in an embrace divine.

member a hazel-eyed woman Than whom never dream was more fair, ike a star in a storm gleamed her brow Thro' the dark flowing flood of her hair. How swift flew the horses before us, How swift flew the passion-winged hours No Turk ever dreamed of such bouries As lie in the arms of the Gisours:

ast, fast went the horses before us, Fast, fast ig the night keen and cold; to-night those wild bells sound so clearly It can't be that I am so old. Soft, soft, but how warm was the pressure On mine, of her velvety cheek; Oh, stars; ye have not yet forgotten That fey, too delicious te speak.

Fast went the horses before us! Close, close pressed the check soft and warm And then -oh, ye stars! through what Winters What Winters of snow and of storm, What Summers and shows ye have kept it, Her secret and mine, of our bliss,
When her red lips turned joyously, gently,
And blessed my thrilled lips with a kiss!

Hey, Putte, my grandson, stand up here:
Dost ever go sleigh-riding now? [cups
Are there maidens, whose lips are like wine.
Whose cheeks are like sunset o'er show? Have the hearts of the girls grown colder, Are cheeks now forbidden to press? Or are there lips whose soft voices yet whispe Love's latest and sweetest caress?

My itps have grown thin-I am old, And the current of life runneth slow But silently, lonesome and cold, No bells ring out on the night, No cheek against mine, no delicious caress, Till my hope shall be changed into sight

The snow-drifts his deep in the church-yard Heaped up over head-stone and cross, While deep under snow drift and grave-mound And head-stone long covered with moss, ike the maiden, whose eyes of soft hazel Were as deep as the depths of the skies; And the kiss of her lips that once blessed me

I shall know-when the blessed arise. en you drive down the valley Rein up at the church in the glen; Go slowly and sacredly by it.
And, Phil. do not touch her lips then; Don't kiss the dear child, but keep quiet, And press your cheek closely to hers; Let the houses go gently, and hear you The psalm of the splemn old firs.

Then up the long hill with a rattle, Hardware, Queensware, Cutlery, and all Then clasp the glad girl to your bosom, Goods usually found in a country Store.

Conderspert, Nev. 27, 1861. Then down the sharp hill with a shout, Then tell her the old, happy story,
And hear her sweet "Yes," whispered low—
While I sleep in the white Winter moonlight
And dream of the bright Long Ago.
