CONGRESS.

The present Congress is unable to agree to positive legislation upon several important subjects, and can only pass them over to the Thirry-ninth Congress. The War department, the Treasury department lost. The blacks can be in no better hands in another, and so on. There is no system under which their capacity for selfgovernment is enlarged and strengthened. Gen. Banks governed them from the pechurches as well as cabins and, gardens. It seems to me that it would be better to establish an independent bureau, but at any rate let some good bills pass.

Another measure which the republicans in Congress find it impossible to agree upon is the Reconstruction bill. It has been laid upon the table, and that is the were a unit against the bill, and secured for the business
