THAT DAY.

I wonder if into each life Drops, soon or late, some golden day, In which all others, like a mist, Melt slowly, dreamily away?

When the young May wakes with a smile That brightens over hill and glen, Comes the thought softly unto all, "Morn shone with wilder beauty, then!

And do the quiet Summer noons But mind them of more perfect light ?-And wavering shadows lend their feet.
Once more into a calmer night?

How is it, when the forest birds Chant their sweet vespers o'er and o'er Do tenderer voices in their bearts Sing half-forgotten joys once more?

And, when the fragrant breezes stir The rustling branches of the lind, Do they remember greener trees That trembled in a lighter wind?

I know not for the rest; but I Found, just before the Summer died, The rerest day: no blot nor stain From more to golden eventide!

Now when I close my eyes. I find No leaf grown dim through all the hours. No breeze forgetful how to thrili The lowliest meadow-flowers.

That perfect day! in all the years

No dawn shall brenk with such red gleams, No white cloud harges through the sky Drift, freighted with such tender dreams! The purple wild verbenas waved

Their drooping plumes in shade and light, And by the forest pathways gleamed The dalibarda's stars of white; And, mong their scarlet berries bright,

Still shook a few gay petals loose. Showed yet a few rare purple buds. Dear little sparrows, how ye sang Thro all those glad hours, clear and sweet!

How the wild ferns and sedges stirred Ap il bent beneath the wind's light feet What soft, uncertain voices came Uppreathed rom menya woodland shade, As if some wandering thought of Love In Nature's temple stood and prayed!

And when the twilight came and husbed The merry voices of the Cay—
What coul dews dropped on leaf and flower,
What trembling shadows round us lay!

if I live a thousand years. I o'n but count one blessed day!-Brighter than any Summer noon And sweeter han the sweetest May!

Fall; twilight shadows, still and dim; Shut out the light from hill and plain! Forever in my that ful heart, Shall that most perfect day remain ! May 18, 1805.

It was opened for interment May 1, 1864, and within the year 5000 have been buried there. In a year or two more it will be the most populsus city of the dead on this side of the Atlantic. Its conversion into a cemetery renders it impossible that it can ever be used as a residence again. General De-Russey has already removed his headquarters from there to the house of Gen. Lee's son, immediately north. Many of the graves contain the bodies of southern soldiers who died in our hospitals, but in every case the headboard of the grave bears the word "Rebel," in large letters,
