When they bore her, weepings
To a little, silent house,
Turned and left her sleeping!
Made no sign to those who mourned That my heart was greiving, That her absence, is my life Any void was leaving!

But I said to Autumn, "Strew Thy bright leaves above her! I have not so much to give, Yet .- 1 love her !" And to Witter, "Her low couch With thy white snows cover, I can bring her nothing now, I Yet,—I love her!"

And of Spring I asked with tears, "When thy birds are singing.
Let them watch above her rest, Sweetest blossoms Springing And let Summer never fail, Though the years grow dreary, With her greenest leaves to make That mound look cheery!"

Thou wilt keep her calmer, Grave, Than my arms could fold heri!— Loss nor anguish shall not make Her still heart grow colder. Out of death in Heaven's sweet light, She with joy is waking :I, of Earth, can offer her Nothing worth her taking.

Yet, dear friends that love us both, Think not we are parted,—
Often will she come to me
If I live true-hearted I I, who sorrow in your pain.
Whose anguish cannot move her; Also smile with her new joy, For I love her! EvA.
