repudiated, and that the people of the free States are preparing to rebuke him, with even more emphasis than they rebuked the rebellion itself, they will, like sensible men, prepare for the inevitable future. We must recollect that there are men in the South—men of sense and men of reason—men who but for Andrew Johnson's extraordinary perfidy, would to-day be almost where we are, and would cheerfully be advocating the proposed amendment to the National Constitution.

Another clause was to prevent any one who held office under the United States, and had sworn to support the Constitution and laws, and then went into the rebellion, shall not again hold office, unless permitted by a vote of two-thirds of Congress. No one ought to object to that except a Copperhead. As well might we put a man, who has been convicted of perjury, into the witness stand, and permit him to give evidence, or to put a convicted murderer into the jury-box to try another murderer.

Johnston is fond of quoting the parable of the prodigal son, and saying that we should receive the South as he was received by his father. Let the rebels eat husks until they come back like the prodigal son. Why cannot the loyal men govern the country without the former nigger drivers? The Democrats have been so accustomed to look to this class for instructions, that they want them back to lord it over them once more. Johnson sheds tears over the sad condition of the rebels. But five years ago the rebels swore they never would come back, and would never associate with Northern men no more than they would with hyenas.

stake a blow against British oppression [cheers], he put forward the military and restrained them from making an effort in their own behalf—so he cheated them. The colored people of Nashville, one gave him a gold watch, and he promised to be their Moses and to lead them through the Red Sea of servitude to liberty. But he did not do it, as he promised, and hecheated them. He retains the gold watch, however. [Laughter.] The ex-rebels of the South had no security that he would not cheat them, and the speaker felt almost certain that Johnson would cheat them, as he had cheated others, if he found the popular sentiment too strong to be resisted. In that case the President would be in a bad way, for there would be no one else to cheat. [Laughter and cheers.]

MAINE! We have at last complete returns of the election held in Maine. It is as follows: General Chamberlain, the Union candidate for Governor, has a majority of 27,356. He has received the largest majority ever given to any party in that State. The Republicans have elected every member of Congress, by majorities ranging from 4,000 to 6,000! The State Senate consists of 31 members, and every one is a Union Republican! In the House the Republicans have 138 members and the Copperheads 13!

OREGON! Corbett, Unionist, of Oregon, has been elected United States Senator, over Nesmith, Copperhead. Another star in our banner.
