And, as we read in ancient history that the (kn)"ox knoweth his crib, and the ass his master's stall" so it was but reasonable to expect that as the first had been secured the other would follow as a conse quence. And, that all may understand be it remembered that this place is possessed of a high and mighty man of law, large round the middle, and whose caput is a cross between a south-down squash and a salt-river apple-dumpling. He is one, of whom it has been said that the only means of access to the spot which in men is supposed to be the seat of the brain, is by the nose. Sometime since, in pity for his gross blundering, a brother lawyer advised him to burn his books and snuff the ashes; but sad to record, the exhibition of to-day proves conclusively that he has failed to profit by this kind advice. When the new servant of Moses presented his ballot to the election board and it was very justly refused on the charge of non-residence, and the charge sustained, he flew into a terrible rage, beat his fists, called voters who exercised the right of differing with him, "sweet smelling young men," "pupe," and other names of cross between a south-down squash and a
