The Credit of Pennsylvania.

The best answer to all the trash that i daily doled out by jaundiced journalists in Fact. The finances of Pennsylvania is popular topic. It troubles even the turbid Pribune, which takes especial pains to insult Pennsylvania with its senseless maunderings. Of late Mr. Greeley's organ has taken particular care to impose its impertinence upon the citizens of our Common-wealth. Indeed, it has given our financial matters more consideration than it has givdverts to "A Strain on Pennsylvania Cred-" and avers that our State cannot stand ny more such financiering, that her credit low enough, and so on.

Now let us look at this thing. An examnation shows that the highest price offered this day (September 14, 1872) for New York this day (September 14, 1872) for New York State six per cent. loans, with interest added from July 1st, (according to the Tribune,) is 1061—the net value being 1051; and that the highest price offered for Pennsylvania State sixes, with interest from August 1st, is 1061, the net value being 1061, or 11 per cent. higher than our New York neighbor. Again; according to Jay Cooke & Co.'s London circular, we find that the price of dollar bonds of Pennsylvania in the market of the English capital, on August 31st, was 86, while those of Massachusetts were quoted at 85—which we consider a very fair answer to the slander of the Tribune touching ne financial credit of Pennsylvania.

Now we all know, if we know anything that none are so shrewd as those who hold market value of interest-paying bonds is a true test of their real value. Tried by this standard, the credit of Pennsylvania is 11 per cent. better than that of New York or my other Commonwealth in the American

Nor is this accidental. It is the result of the ability and integrity with which our State finances have been managed, and the confidence entertained by those who invest noney in the perfect security there is in Pennsylvania promises to pay. There is not an intelligent man in our whole State who does not know that Pennsylvania is in a financial condition to day that cannot be claimed by any other Com-monwealth in the whole world. We are to day raising a revenue of over six millions, paying our expenses, liquida-ting two millions of indebtedness yearly, and contributing one and a half millions annually to school and charitable purposes; and yet we are not taxing a single cent on landed property or the humble homes of the honest and hard-working men and women
