The number of in-The undersigned is about to close up his structors and lecturers was also large, and if we may judge from the expressions of those most interested, their quality was excellent.
The chief of these was Prof. Allen, of Mansfield, and his long experience in the field of education, as, well as in the smaller sphere of Institutes, insured the success of his management. Miss Flora T. Parsons, or Rochester, Prof. Winters, of this village, contributed not a little to the entertainment and instruction of the young teachers of both sexes who attended. We don't undertake to give anything like an abstract of the daily exercises. Such a eport would show very little of the spirit of the sessions, and would necessarily prove. rather dry to the general reader. Suffice it ted with shade trees, and otherwise ornamentto say that the meetings were mainly devoted to lectures by the different instructors on subjects relating to education and the teachers, work. Miss Parsonsefforts were mainly devoted to the exposition of the advantages of "object teaching," a subject but imper-fectly understood by many present. The lady seemed thoroughly posted and fully others. The lectures of Rev. N. L. Reyn olds were highly appreciented, as were al most all those delivered by the several instructors present. One happy feature of the occasion was the delivering of brief remarks by various gentlemen of our village not immediately connected with educational interests. A brisk passage at armes between two of them, toward the close of the week, was a source of no little amusement. The whole the Institute was admitted on all hands to have been a most successful and instructive one. We heard just one serious criticism of the cause of education. Some thought that too do with the exercises. The younger teachcouraged to impart their experiences to each rances of their calling. These things, it is contended, would prove of more practical enefit to the young teacher than a course of ectures, however excellent in themselves .-We don't know how far this criticism may be justified, nor how valuable it may be; but it seems worthy of consideration. At any rate, it is made by persons who have Mrs. Anna Randall Deihl. had experience in teaching, and who are now practical men of the world.
