DECORATION DAY IN WELLSBORO. - Last

Calkins, closing with the Lord's Prayer in which many of the audience joined in response.-At the conclusion of the prayer the Choir sang the well-known verses beginning 'Sweet sleep the brave." Col. Stone then opened the addresses of the day, remarking that the audience had assembled under the auspices of the Odd Fellows and Good Templars of Wellsboro to honor the memory of in the recent war. In the hurry and bustle of life we are apt to forget those men who had passed away from us. But to-day our recollection carried us back to the scenes that had passed away, and we were walking to day in the picture-gallery of memory.-As he gazed out upon this audience he bore a resemblance to some of those whom We understand one man, whose name we he knew among those scenes of war, and who honor we pay to those men, whether much or little, their deeds and their examples are inscribed upon the national records. And now, in every State and Territory of this land, the general and growing prosperity, growth in every good thing-all are monuments to the soldiers who died that these might be possible. While we here build our pose. In the State of New York the law made the day a legal holiday, and he looked forward to the time when the day shall be the dead.

Set open as a bolidar to the time when the day shall be the dead. et apart as a holiday by the whole country. The Chairman then introduced Rev. N. L. Reynolds, who said he supposed he had been > principles which should animate us, the obiect and spirit of these annual celebrations will have passed forever. The first objection that was urged was the feeling that the contest in which these soldiers fell was merely a great family quarrel. But it was not. It was not so much of a family quarrel-not so much of a civil war even, as was the war of the Revolution. This last soldiers have left behind. was a contest where section was arrayed against section; that first was one where brother was pitted against brother, father the cemetery. The line was very long, beagainst son, and where a man's foes were those of his own household. Yet who thinks of slighting the memories of the men of the Revolution or passing them by without honor out of respect to the brothers who fought on the other side? Even the descendents of the "Cow Boys" of the Revolution now

If we drift away from certain fundamental honor the memories of the patriots who fought for their independence. Some say, let us honor the men who fell on both sides in this contest. But this cannot be. One side was right and the other wrong, or the struggle was senseless and useless, and the men of both sides have thrown away their lives, and deserves credit only for bravery. We should honor high devotion to principle, to the right and the good. Both sides may have been equally brave and sincere. So Modoes may be brave; and we know the persecutors of the early Church were sincere. 'But the Union soldier sacrificed his life for right, for humanity, for justice, as well as for his country. The men on the other side laid down their lives to preserve a hateful institution. It makes all the difference in the world what a man makes a sacrifice for. Some mon give money to destroy the baleful liquor traffic, while others make an equal sacrifice to preserve it for their own profit; and they are hot to be equally honored. So the rebels laid down their lives of a Congressman as legitimately entitled to honor when he has a moneyed interest at

To place the soldiers of both armies on an equality is to dishonor both. Where is the glory of a contest when neither party is in the right. I believe in love for all men; but I believe in honor for the right and shame for the wrong.

Again, we are told that the survivors of the war are entitled to as much honor as those who are left from the war of the Revolution -that while we honor the dead we should also honor the living. That is true; and when as much time has passed, and the soldiers of the last war have become as few as are now the survivors of our earlier conflicts the people will cherish them with equal honor. Meanwhile, we cherish the memory of our loved ones who have passed away, and as besits a peace-loving age we deck their graves with the brightest blossoms of the year. The flowers may die as did our loved ones; but the sail which produced those flowers, for which those brave men died shall be forever free. To-day we come with our religious sentiments to pay honor to the soldiers of the Union who gave up their homes and laid down their lives for their country. The Band then played The Star-Spangled Banner, and Rev. J. F. Calkins was introduced as the next speaker. He said that on the first, second and third days of July, 1863, some persons in this audience were made widows, and a good many in this boro were made orphans. On the 19th day of November following many army officers who were engaged in that three-days struggle, together with President Lincoln, assembled to dedicate the National Cometery of Gettysburg. On that occasion Edward Everett made most finished oration, and the Martyr President made a few remarks that have been regarded as a perfect specimen of that style of ratory. The speaker had been requested to read those remarks as follows; Fourscore and seven yours age our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that tha nation might live. It is altogether fitting and prop or that we should do this. But in a larger sense we who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our for long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

The case of the Commonwealth vs. John The speaker then related how, on the night of the Corning and Blossburg Railroad in the place of James W. Donaldson, resigned.
