Many of our readers in this village have no doubt noticed a carriage and handsome team driving about the streets on standing at the depot awaiting the arrival of passengers, and some of them may have wondered what it meant. It means that the enterprising firm of KETCHAM & COLES have establishe a public back in Wellsboro, and that hereafter our citizens are to have the means at hand at all reasonable hours for traveling anywhere about the vicinage in a most expeditious and agreeable manner. The new "institution" must prove a great public convenience, and we trust it will be generally natronized and sustained by our citizens.

At the time when the above mentione ioneers pitched their tents in the wilderness, the bear, wolf, panther, and catamoun were the only visitors that made them daily calls. The deer, rabbit, wild turkey, phonsant, and speckled trout for a number of years were their only means of subsistence. And as for the article of bread, it was a great rarity in those early days of their new settlement. Sometimes for weeks they were compelled to live on greens and bran bread,-Grist mills, at that early day, were not known to have an existence any nearer to them than Painted Post and Williamsport. And when they did make their pilgrimages to either mill, it was not to take a grist along to get ground, but it was to buy a small one and carry it home on their backs. Maple Buckwheat, Corn, shelled, sugar and furs were their only articles of exchange, and with these alone they purchased the few necessaries of life.
