No Sect in Heaven. Talking of sects till late one eve,
Of the various doctrines the saints believe,
That night I stood, in a troubled dream,
By the side of a darkly flowing stream. And a "Churchman" down to the river came, When I heard a strange voice call his name: "Good father, stop; when you cross this tide, You must leave your robes on the other side," But the aged father did not mind; And his long gown fleated out behind, As down to the stream his way he took, His pale hands clasping a gilt-edged book "I'm bound for heaven; and, when I'm there, I shall want my book of Common Prayer; And, though I put on a starry crown, I should feel quite lost without my gown." Then he fixed his eyes on the shining track, that his gown was heavy, and held him back; And the poor old father tried in vain, A single step in the flood to gain. I saw him again on the other side, but his sitk gown floated on the tide; And no one asked, in that blissfu spot, Whether he belonged to "the Church" or not.

Then down to the river a Quaker strayed;
His dress of a rober hue was made:
My coat and hat must be all of gray;
I can not go any other way." Then he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin, And staidly, solemnly waded in, And his broad-brimued hat he pulled down tight Over his forehead so cold and white. But a strong wind carried away his hat; A moment he silently sighed or r, that; And then, as he gazed to the further shore, His coat slipped off and was seen no more.

As he entered heaven, his suit of gray Weit quietly sailing, away, away; And none of the angels questioned him About the width of his beaver's brim. Next came Dr. Watts, with a bundle of Psalms Tied nicely up in his aged arms, And hymns as many, a very wise thing, That the reople in heaven, "all round," might But I thought that he heaved an anxions eigh, As he saw that the river ran broad and high, And he looked rather surprised as, one by one, The Psalms and Hymns in the wave went down.

And after him, with his MSS., Came Wesley, the pattern of godliness; But he cried, "Dear me!" what shall I do? The water has seaked them through and through. And there on the river far and wide, Away they went down the swollen tide; And the saint, astonished, passed through alone, Without his manuscripts, up to the throne. Then, gravely walking, two saints by name Down to the stream together came, But, as they stopped at the river's brink, I saw one saint from the other shrink. "Sprinkled or plunged, may I ask you, friend, How you attained to life's great end?" "Thus, with a few drops ou my brow." "But I have been dipped, as you'll see me now; "And I really think it will hardly do,
As I'm 'close communion,' to closs with you;
You're bound, I know, to the realms of bliss,
But you go that way, and I'll go this." Then straightway plunging with all his might, Away to the left—his friend to the right, Apart they went from this world of sin But at last togother they entered in.

And now, when the river was rolling on, A Prosbyterian church went down; Of women there seemed an innumerable throng, But the men I could count as they passed along. And, concerning the road, they could never agree, The old or the newlyway, which it should be, Nor ever a moment paused to think That both would lead to the river's brink.

And a cound of murmuring, long and loud, Came ever up from the moving crowd: "You're in the old way, and I'm in the new; That is the false, and this is the true;"— Or, "I'm in the old way, and you're in the new; That'is the false, and this is the true."

But the brethren only sacmed to speak: Modest the sisters walked, and meek, And if ever one of them chanced to say What troubles she inct with on the way, How she longed to pass to the other side, Nor feared to cross over the swelling tide, "A voice arcse from the brethren then, "Let no one speak but the holy men!" For have ye not heard the words of Paul, Oh, let the women keep silence all?"

I watched them long in my curious dream,
Till they stood by the borders of the stream;
Then, just as I thought, the two ways met:
But all the brethren were talking yet,
And would talk on, till the héaving tide
Carried them over side by side.—
Side by side, for the way was one;
The tollsome journey of life was done;
And all who in Christ the Saylour died
Came out alike on the other side. Came out alike on the other side. No forms or crosses or books had they

A young lady wrote home a short note from a place where she was visiting, with the P. S., "You will see by my signature that I am married." Sydney Smith, in a letter to Mr. Howard of Corby, once observed:—"The only acquaintance I ever made at Taunton is that of the clerk of the parish, a very sensible man, with great Amenity of disposition." On the eve of a battle, an officer came to ask permission of the commander to go and see his father, who was on his death-bed. "Go," said the General, "you 'honor your father and mother that your days may be long upon the land."

"I think," said the acudent thoughtfully, "I should tell him he had better get somebody else."

At the time of the cattle plague a certain English farmer was seized with the strange idea that he was suffering from it. No doctor could persuade him to the contrary. At last one medical man gave him a prescription to a chemist. The chemist soon un derstood the nature of the case, and read aloud the note:—"This man has the cattle plague; take him into your back yard and shoot him in accordance with the Act of Parliament." The farmer quickly vanished and was cured from thenceforward.

A Doctor recently died who was the oldest medical man in one of the large midland towns of England. The babies he had he ped in early practice through the perils of childhood had come to be gray-haired men; and one day, as the story goes, he had an engagement with one of these, a well-known proposes. known merchant.
