TRIALS AT THE LAST TERM OF COURT.—Not many cases were tried at the term of Court just closed, but some of them were of sufficient interest to justify the publication of something more than the usual official minutes. That of the Commonwealth vs. Robinson was one of the most interesting and important. It appeared from the testimony that the complainant, a young man named Wheeler, and the defendant were in a barbers' shop at Mansfield on Saturday evening, when Wheeler was exhibiting a common law disorderly conduct. After others had examined it, the defendant asked to be allowed to look at it, and finally put it in his pocket. Apparently to annoy Wheeler, the defendant took Wheeler for the return of the rule, Robinson offered him an old one, saying that was good enough for him. Wheeler at last went out of the barbers' shop, and the defendant was arrested. Wheeler was arrested for the return of the rule, Robinson offered him an old one, saying that was good enough for him.
