The Massachusetts Convention.

The struggle for the Governor's chair the old Bay State has been one of concern contest possessed no little personal interest, for it was between men of national reputation-between men who may be justly regarded as the best exemplars of two antagonistic schools of politics. While both candidates were of one party, the one represented that large class of politicians who believe in nothing so much as success-who are without sincere convictions, without faith in public virtue or private integrity, and without principles which they do not hold at less value than the breath of popuhir fayor; while the other stood for that smaller class of men whose political belief a vigorous fight in Congress next session in is held unfalteringly to the end because it is the interest of internal improvements in the grounded in their moral convictions. The thermometer indicates the mercury down to 55 degrees above zero; the nights are sufficiently cool to need a thin covering, and once again the poor people who are unable to spare the time and expense of visiting watering places and other fashionable summer resorts in the hot season may have the consolation of feeling that under nature's law they now enjoy at their homes the invigorating atmosphere of Saratoga and Newport in the North.

Every one here interested in national polities is anxious to know the import of every. telegram of a political nature from Massachusetts. The triumph of Ben Butler would be haifed with joy by the majority, because with which they purposed going south at the first open water. It has, however, become reasonably-certain that the untiring Ben will not be the regular nomince of the Massachusetts Republican Convention.

The improvements in the city are still going on. The Board of Public Works, seemingly, is still undaunted by the cry of some about its extravagance. There is no city in the Union now, and probably never has been, in such a brief space of time, witness to such improvements as is Washington .--Streets have been excavated six and eight feet for grading, in front of whole blocks. Property owners, of course, will be made to suffer, unless Congress comes to their rescue, and makes appropriations sufficient to indemnify them. This year it will be necessary to appropriate double that amount, and next year as much more. With these appropriations, it is consoling to believe that the streets of Washington will compare favorably with the streets of any city in the world. Property is exchanging hands and buildings are going up rapidly. The wealthier portion of the country are well represented here. Many have become owners of real estate, and claim residence Already several representative Southern men are tarrying here on their way south from summer resorts north, laying pipe for specimen of the mere politician—a man of adequate legislation to encourage the buildinfinite mental resources, of unblushing auding of necessary railroads, canals, bridges,

AN OFFICIAL REPORT FROM COMMANDER RRAINE-THE POLARIS SUNK-THE CREW PROBABLY SAFE-THEIR CAMP FOUND. The Secretary of the Navy received the following dispatch last Wednesday: "U. S. Ship Juniata,) *
St. John's, (N. F.,) Sept. 10, 1873.

The above dispatch was received from Commander Braine, of the Juniata. Littleton Island referred to is about sixty miles north of Northumberland Island, where the party rescued from the Polaris supposed they had left her. It is a little south of the of August, and examined the shores of Nor-thumberland, where Tyson and his party reported that they left the Polaris. No trace of the party was found here, and no sign of life, and it is supposed that the rescued men were mistaken in the locality of their separation from the vessel. Near Littleton Island, however, in latitude 78:23 north, longitude 73:46 west, we discovered the camp, August 14th, in which the Budding. ton party had wintered. Six Esquimaux were living in it, and from them and the manuscript records left behind by Captain Buddington we ascertained the history of the expedition up to a period only six weeks previous. After the separation from Tyson he Polaris party constructed a house of ship timber and canvas in which they spent the winter. The ship being too badly damaged to risk a voyage home, though sho still floated, they used some of the material in her for the construction of two whale boats enabled to carry out their intention, and put to sea, probably making for Cape York, on the coast of Greenland, about 250 miles to the southeast, where they could hope to catch a whaler bound for Labrador. We kept a sharp lookout all along the coast both going and returning, but saw no signals and no human beings.

"We obtained from the camp all the manuscripts of the expedition and all the journals. These records are very long, and contain a great deal of valuable information. Buddington's party were all well when they took to their boats on the 1st of July. The Polaris remained affoat till three gress meets more work will be done by at weeks ago, when she parted her moorings least one-half than during the months of in a gale, drifted two miles southwest, and sunk in the ice. Another news dispatch from the Juniata dated St. John's, N. F., Sept. 10th, says: "The Tigress, which we left on the 25th of August at Disco, brings important intelligence respecting the missing Polaris. On the 11th of August Commander Green started with his little vessel for the locality in which the Polaris was reported to have been last seen by Tyson's party, between Northumberland Island and the coast of Green-No trace of her was found there, but at Littleton Island the Tigress came upon the remains of a camp, and learned that in June Capt. Buddington and his companions had abandoned the ship and gone south-ward with two boats which they had constructed. The Polaris afterward sank. The men were all well at the time of their departure. The Tigress made a careful search for the boats, and has been ordered by Commander Braine to continue the search to the westward and southward. She sailed again from Disco on the 25th, and nothing further has been heard from her."

Democratic "Principles."

The Democratic leaders of Ohio early in the season concocted "a platform" which has since been adopted, with no material alteration or addition, in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Maine. It is, on the whole, a shrewd production. a shrewd production. Yet, to a candid man, who fairly undertakes to balance in his mind the advantages and the disadvantages of allowing the present Democratic leaders to gain control of the Government, the platform is not likely to amount to much. It is very barren. The absence of the usual glitter and bombast, creditable as it is, brings out more clearly the cynical indifference to principle and the cool, dispassionate political selfishness of the men who at present guide the Democracy. "The Democratic party," says the platform maker, bowing blandly to his audience and adjusting his mask, "seeks to revive no dead issues," it "stands by its principles, which are suited to all times and Government in all constitutional authority.

How polished and smooth these words are. But they are fatal, if the hearer stops to Why does the Democratic party seek to revive no settled issues? A Public Convenience not Appreciated

We call attention to the peculiar advan tages of the registered-letter system, and we note the singular fact that a large maas the sender is concerned, the cost is trivial, (15 cents,) and there is not the double operation of sending to the post office for a money order and then inclosing it in a letter. On the contrary, he can inclose his money in his letter as he writes it, affix six post office by any messenger receive back the postmaster's receipt. On the part of the receiver there is also the same advantage of a single operation, for he finds the money in the letter when he opens it, and is not obliged to present his money order at the post office for payment. But there is also this peculiar advantage-although the registered letter be sent from New York to the remotest prairie post office in Texas, there comes back to the sender, in course of time, the receipt of the party to whom it is addressed, and this the post office brings to him without an additional charge. Thus it saves the receiver the trouble and cost of acknowledging its receipt, and assures the sender that his remittance was actually delivered. So far as safety is involved, the system is subject to the usual casualties, such as fire and shipwreck, but apart from those may be said to be nearly perfect. Every mail agent, from the first postmaster to the last, receipts for the package when he receives it, so if a loss occurs the Department can put its hand upon the responsible party. As a matter of fact, we be-lieve that no loss has occurred under the present revised system except such as would come under the head of actual casualties

Lynch Law in Missouri. The St. Louis Democrat seems discouraged by the outrages committed by vigilants in Missouri. In one word, Judge Lynch is a failure in every respect, and a coward and cruel scoundrel besides. Under these circumstances, would it not be well for the State to organize a public State police in every township and county of the
