There will be a charge of two shillings for admission, which will be given to the ladies of the Episcopal church of Corning, to apply on the parish debt. Many will doubtless take the occasion to see this beautiful ware, before it is sent to Washington, and thus gratify their currentity, and at the same time con-tribute to the worthy object for which it is placed on exhibition.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for November is on our table, ahead of all others. The principal steel engraving, "Crossing the Brook," is very beautiful. So, also, is the mammoth colored steel fashion plate. A prominent feature of this Magazine is its copyright novelettes, two of which appear in this number. "Theo," by Miss Hodgson, and "The Lost Inheritance," by Mrs. Ann S. -A funny but not uncommon incident took place at Blossburg during the financial flurry of last week. It seems that one man had $2,000 on deposit there, and at the beginning of the panic he rushed to the bank sum in the custody of anybody or any corporation. And so our hero turned himself into a sort of miniature "Safe Deposit Company," and stood guard over his treasure incessantly, as it were. Our late civil war has, no doubt, done more to spread an exact knowledge of the physical conformation and natural resources of the country among the present generation of Americans than all the schools of the land. Most people study the mouth and throat, and fasten with a thoroughly only those subjects in which they are deeply interested; and there are multitudes of men who owe little to the schools, so far as geography is concerned, who have very clear and correct ideas as to the topography, climate and soil of most parts of the

> But we didn't set out to write an article apon the study of geography, but to express our opinion of an elementary work upon that science, which has recently been laid upon our table. "Colton's Common School Geography" is certainly an improvement upon many of its predecessors, although it is open to some of the objections indicated above. The book is of an elementary character, and much of the minute information which is studied with reluctance and forgotten with alacrity has been omitted for its pages. This is a good feature of the work. The States of the Uuion are treated in groups and not singly, as in many previous napuals. But the strong point of the work: s the series of admirable maps drawn expressly for it. The name of the compiler is lmost a sufficient guarantee for the excellence of this feature of the book, and the series of railroad and reference maps of the United States at the close of the volume will be found of value to many who have not a good atlas at hand. For the benefit of the young scholar a valuable chapter on map

A SAWING MATCH .- To the Editor of the Agitator : As you have never heard of such a place as Glen Savage Mill, I thought a few lines from here would be accentable to your valuable paper. Our mill is situated about four niles from Fair Hope, a small station on P. & E. R. R. We had a little excitement here on Friday, Oct. 10th, 1873. On that day a sawing match came off, for a wager of $150, between our sawyer, I. F. Holmes, formerly a resident of your vicinity, and some lumbermen from South Hamdon. The bet was he could not saw 25,000 feet of the mill, about 500 cords of wood belonging one inch pine boards from sixteen foot logs in ten hours run. The mill was started at 7 o'clock a. m., with Mr. Holmes at the lever, was confident of success. We had quite a number of spectators on hand to witness the match. On a signal from the lumber counand drew out his money. But what to do ter, he made his first cut, running till 11:80, with it he didn't know. Having lost confi- and sawing in four hours and twenty-four dence in all the world; he couldn't trust that minutes 19,200 feet. The last two hours we ran he averaged 4,700 feet per hour, and I am sure no circular saw mill in this State has done so well. At half past eleven an accident occurred that would make the stoutest heart quake. In running in a log the dog slipped, letting the log turn on the saw, knocking out thirty-five teeth and scattering them in all directions. Only imagine a cirand the teeth tearing out. But I am happy his bosom informed him emphatically that frightened. It was an Emerson saw. Mr. Holmes wanted to put on an extra saw and cut the balance, but the parties agreed to let it drop. They were satisfied he could saw 45,000 feet in ten hours' run if nothing occurred. They left the mill in the best of spirits, and finished the evening with music and dancing. They had quite a nice time. his money back to the bank, and went to bed and took their defeat very easy. Mr. I. F. Holmes is a sawyer of wide reputation; but this is the best he has done. He is at home in a saw mill, and never out of place with his hand on the lever and his quick eye taking in every thing at a glance. I suppose some of his old friends will be glad to hear of his success.

> WADE'S FINANCIAL OPERATIONS .- Nelreference to the money which he obtained from the MoBride mansion after the perpetration of the flend. ish double assassination which has heretofore been recorded in these columns. In a recent conversation, says the Williamsport Bulletin, Wade remarked that everything was all right now, as individuals in the city were in possession of all the gold he had secreted, and that those persons bad visited him in prison,-Upon being questioned as to who those persons were, he replied that that was his own business, and he intended that it should remain a secret. He has always said that no rich man should ever get hold of it, and he had fulfilled his promise. It will be remembered that during the session of court at which Wade was tried, he confessed that he had secreted a large amount of gold near the aqueduct in Lycoming creek; that he had several bags, one containing twenty shilling pieces, another five dollar pieces, a third ten dollar coins and a fourth twenty dollar pieces. All of these he poured into a large bag, walked into the water and sunk the money, placing upon it three large stones. Upon search being made the stones were found in the very place described by Wade, but no bag of gold. It come the possessor of it; that Wade after secreting the money, repaired to a canal boat lying not far from the aqueduct, and leaped upon the deck, the water dripping from his clothes; that he did not develop anything at that time; that siter his capture he twice sent word, for a certain man to come and visit him.

The man complied with the request, as he had been intimately acquainted with the prisoner, and from this and other facts it is conjectured that the individual referred to was told by Wade where he could obtain the money. This part of the prisoner's programme carried out, he was free to confess where he had secured and that he had made good his word that no rich man should possess it. And now he boasts that it is in good hands, and even goes so far as to say that some of this gold has been exchanged for greenbacks, and had a piece of the broken stove on it, the nails in the by the exchange. To what extent his story is correct lieved that he secreted money near the aqueduct, and it is certain that if he did so some one was directed to the spot, or it would have remained there. It is well the cell in which he was confined at that time examined in every nook and corner for money, but none could be found. The officers, after retiring, were sur prised to see the prisoner present bills, and ask that certain articles be purchased for him. He now states that he had in his cell a bar of soap; with a spoon he dug a hole to the conter, deposited therein the money, replaced the soap, and with his hand made smooth surface so that it would not be observed. He takes great pleasure in relating how he fooled the of ficers, who thought they were smart. Various estimates have been made as to the amount of money the McBrides possessed, some placing it as high as $56,-000 basing their belief upon the fact that the old man a short time before he was murdered, endeavored to nersuade a gentleman living in this locality to take th farm, work it and live upon it: that he had about $41. the door and look out upon the spot where he had $15. 000 more. He was old, and would like to have a man and who could assist him in case he should ever be attacked. This gentleman urged McBride to deposihis money to one of the Williamsport banks, but the old man did not favor the idea, and replied that either himself or his wite always kept guard, and with the guns he kept loaded he could give any plunderer a warm reception. But the sequel shows that the mur dered man was too confident of his own power to pro tect his hearded treasure. A beard was found in the house upon which appeared a column of figures added up, and presenting a total of over $41,000. Thi it is urged coin ides with the statement made by Mc the premises $56,000, the largest portion of which Wado succeeded in bringing away on that evential at-

Painted Post is a queer old town. It has a queer old name. It has queer people in it, and they had a queer festival there in the lecture room of the Baptist church.
