Should a Minister Continue to Serve a Declining Church?

This question, however important, is one which cannot be answered by a simple affirmative or negative. Every case is to be judged of by itself.

1. There are vicissitudes in all things earthly, or which occur on earth. It does not always rain, neither is there a perpetual drought. With the husbandman a seed time is indispensable to a harvest.

2. The work to be done for the Lord is varied, and different parts of it require peculiar adaptations in the workman.

3. Every congregation has something characteristic, and every minister has his peculiarities. Hence a people may be highly susceptible, docile, and ready to yield obedience...

4. Sometimes a minister's usefulness is prevented by an ungodly clique, or an injurious person; a Diotrophus, a tale-bearer, or evil-sourcerer.

5. Some men may have slender, or rather no just qualifications for usefulness anywhere, in the ministry.

of good faith, and are keeping the covenant of labor on their part; and shall not the Church on her part, keep her covenant of compensation?

On the subject of a wise and effective use of consecrated funds, we have several times spoken. Much, however, remains yet to be said.

We may recur to this subject again, ere long. For the present we would urge liberal contributions. Relieve the Board from its embarrassments.

The growth of this Synod, its zeal in spreading the Gospel, and its attachment to Presbyterian doctrines and order, are pleasing.

The last meeting of the Synod was at San Francisco, October 4th. There were present thirteen ministers and five ruling elders.
