It was the muffled tramp of feet, To hid the withered cart-track, And voices from the swalling streets...

Miscellany. THE COINERS. FROM THE DIARY OF A DETECTIVE.

During the year of 1847 the West was flooded with a counterfeit coin. It was so well manufactured that it passed readily.

At the close of the year, the counterfeit coin was still to be seen in circulation, and it was, therefore, in the capital of the West that I proceeded.

I had nothing to guide me. The fact, however, that Chicago was the city where the counterfeit coin was most abundant, led me to suspect that the manufactory was some-where within its limits.

I had placed one of them in the hands of a man, and he had given it to me, as a gift, saying "I am going to give you a dollar."

"This is the best counterfeit coin I ever saw," said the man, "and it is worth a dollar."

"Is all the counterfeit money in circulation here of the same character as this?"

"I know them well, for I have handled a great many in my time. There is some of the money that is circulating here, but it is not like that."

"I have frequently in the course of my life been obliged to put up with a rather cheap quality of gold, and I did not allow my equanimity to be disturbed by it."

I stood for more than an hour gazing out of the opening which served for a window. Be-fore me, an immense party, the like of which I had never seen, was passing in review.

moonlight night, so bright that I could see to read the smallest print.

At last I began to grow weary and throwing myself on my pallet, I was plunged in deep slumber. How long I slept I know not, but I was awakened by a dull sound.

Now I am naturally an inquiring mind, and the sound, occurring as it did in the middle of the night, roused my curiosity.

I put on my boots, the only articles of attire I had discarded, and cautiously opened the door of my chamber and noiselessly descended the rickety staircase.

Not a soul was visible, but the sound I have mentioned grew much more distinct as I approached the place from whence it proceeded.

What a wonderful scene! I was in a large room, and I saw a man standing by a table, and another man sitting in a chair.

"What are you doing here, my good fellow?" he exclaimed giving me a shake.

"I am sorry to hear that you are here, my good fellow," he said, "but I am glad to see you."

was no counterfeit at all, and some saying it asked me.

"By weighing it with a genuine one," I replied. This plan was immediately adopted and its character proved.

"Perhaps he got this by accident," I heard a man whisper to another.

"Try these," I said, taking the other two out of my pocket.

All their doubts now vanished. "Beautiful," exclaimed some. "Very splendid!" said others.

When they had examined them to their satisfaction they all cordially took me by the hand, every particle of doubt having vanished from their minds.

I have those half dollars still in my possession, and never intend to part with them, for they were certainly the means of saving my life.

MR. NASBY HAS A MOST HORRIBLE VISION. SAINTS' REST, (which is in the State of New Jersey), Oct. 16, 1865.

Last night, weary and disgusted with reading the Bible, I picked up a volume of Camille Poems, and read that splendid poem, "The Last Man." Camille is a poet—there is no doubt about it.

I had been engaged in a dream, and such a dream may I never see again.

Meanwhile the epidemic, which is now devastating Europe, had struck New York. For a time, it struck down all classes.

"I am sorry to hear that you are here, my good fellow," he said, "but I am glad to see you."

Finally, I felt it a duty I owed to the party to follow suit. Seeing the jack-knife, I made my own (which was taken) and was about to sever my intestines, when I took a quart bottle steakin out of the nigger's pocket.

I awoke in a cold sweat, happy to find that it was only a dream; that the nigger still lived in his cusstoid, and that we still had suthin to go on.

A MARVELOUS STORY.—I was bred up in the dislike of the marvellous, or the stupid wonderful as my uncle called it.

"I was once," said he, "engaged in a skirmishing party in America. I advanced too far, was separated from my friends, and saw three Indians in pursuit of me.
