It is neither just nor fair to look at - ... character from a standpoint of one's own selection. A man's profile may be unpreposessing, and his full face agreeable. We once saw a young man whose timidity was a standing joke with all his companions, leap into the Thames, and save a boy from drowning while his tor-mentors stood panic struck upon the bank. The merchant who gives curt answers in his counting-house may be a tender husband and father and a kind helper of the desolate and oppressed. On the other hand, your good humored person, who is all smiles and sunshine in public, may carry something as hard as the nether millstone in the place. where his heart ought to be. Such anomalies are common. There is this comfort, however, for those whose judgments of their fellow mortals lean to the kindly side, such mistakes go to their credits in the great account. He who thinks better of his neighbors than they deserve, cannot be a bad man, for the standard by which his judgment is formed is the goodness of his own heart; It is the base only who believe all men base,—or in other words, like them Is that which acts upon the kidneys. selves. Few, however, are all evil.— Even Nero did a good turn to some body; for when Rome was rejoicing over his death some loving hand cover ed his grave with flowers.

Public men are seldom or never fairly judged at least while living. However pure they cannot escape calumny; however correct, they are sure to find eulogists. History may do them justice; but they rarely get it while alive, either from friends or foes.

Pride is as cruel a beggar as want, and a great deal more saucy. When you have bought one fine thing you must buy ten more that your appearance may be of a piece. It is easier to suppress the first desire than to satisfy alf that follows it.

False happinees renders men stern and proud, and that happiness is never communicated. True happiness ren-ders them kind and sensible, and that happiness is always shared.
