Select Poetry.

FIVE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING. The dew lay glittering on the grass, A mist lay over the brook, At the earliest beam of the golden sun The birds were singing in every bush At five o'clock in the morning.

Bessie, the milkmaid, merrily sang, For the meadows were fresh and fair— The breeze of the morning kissed her brow, And play'd with her nut-brown hair; But she turn'd and look'd around, As if the silence scared her; 'Twas time for the mower to whet his scythe, At five o'clock in the morning.

Over the meadows the mowers came, And carry their voices rang, And one after they wander'd like the wind, To where the milkmaid sang, And as he linger'd by her side, Despite his comrades' warning, The old, old story was told again, At five o'clock in the morning.

Miscellaneous. THE ONE EYED SERVANT. BY JEAN INGELW.

Do you see those two pretty cottages on opposite sides of the common? How brightly their windows are, and how prettily the vines trail over them! A year ago one of them was the dirtiest and most forlorn looking place you can imagine, and its mistress the most untidy woman.

She was once sitting at her cottage door with her arms folded, as if she were deep in thought; though to look at her face, one would not have supposed she was doing more than idly watching the swallows as they flitted about in the sky, or the leaves of the trees, and shabby, her shoes down at heel; the little curtain in her casement, which had once been fresh and white, had a great rent in it; and altogether, she looked poor and forlorn.

She sat some time, gazing across the common, when all on a sudden she heard a little noise, like stitching, near the ground. She looked down, and sitting on the border, under a wall-flower bush, she saw the funniest little man possible, with blue coat, a yellow waistcoat, and a pair of shoes, with a small shoe on his lap, and he was stitching away at it with all his might.

"Good morning, mistress!" said the little man. "A very fine day. Why may you be looking so earnestly across the common?"

"I was looking at my neighbor's cottage," said the young woman. "What! Tom, the gardener's wife? Little Polly, she used to be called; and a very pretty cottage it is, too. Looks like a new one."

"She was always lucky," said Bella, (for that was the young wife's name); "and her husband is always good to her."

"They were both good husbands at first," answered the little cobbler, "without stopping. 'Reach me my awl, mistress, will you, for you seem to have nothing to do. It lies close by your foot.'"

"Well, I can't say but they were both very good husbands at first," replied Bella, reaching the awl with a sigh; "but mine has changed for the worse, and hers for the better; and then, look how she thrives. Only to think of our both being married on the same day; and now I have nothing, and she has two pigs and a cow!"

"And a lot of flax that she spun in the winter," interrupted the cobbler; "and a Sunday gown, as good green stuff as ever was seen, and to my knowledge, handsome as the underkerchief for an apion; and a red waistcoat for her good-man, with three rows of blue glass buttons, and a ditch of bacon in the chimney, and a rope of onions."

"Oh, she's a lucky woman!" exclaimed Bella. "And a tea-tray, with Daniel in the fowl's den upon it," continued the cobbler; "and a fat baby in the cradle."

"Oh, I'm sure I don't envy her that last," said Bella, pettishly. "I've little enough for myself and my husband, letting alone the children; but the cobbler, 'The mistress, isn't your husband in work?'" asked the cobbler.

"No; he's at the alehouse." "Why, how's that? He used to be very sober. Can't he get work?"

"His just master wouldn't keep him, because he was so shabby." "Humph!" said the little man. "He's groom, is he not? Well, as I was saying, your neighbor opposite thrives; but no wonder? Well, I've nothing to do with other people's secrets; but I could tell you, only 'I'm busy, but I must go.' 'Could I tell me what?' cried the young wife. 'O, good cobbler, don't go, for I've nothing to do. Pray tell me why it's no wonder she should thrive?'"

"Well," said he, "it's no business of mine, you know, but said before, I think you must be a woman who has a servant—a hard-working one, too—who is always helping them."

"A servant!" repeated Bella; "my neighbor has a servant! No wonder, then, everything looks so neat about her, but I never said that before, how could she afford to pay her wages?"

"She has a servant, I say," repeated the cobbler—"a one-eyed servant," but she pays her no wages, to my certain knowledge. Well, good morning, mistress, I must go.

"Do not stop one minute," cried Bella, urgently. "Where did she get this servant?"

"Oh, I don't know," said the cobbler; "servants are plentiful enough; and Polly used to tell me that."

"And what does she do for her?" "Do for her? why, all sorts of things. I think she's the cause of her prosperity. To my knowledge, she never refuses to do anything—keeps Tom's and Polly's clothes in beautiful order, and the baby's."

"Dear me!" said Bella, in an envious tone, and holding up both her hands; "well, she's a lucky woman, and I always said so. She takes good care of her, but I never see her servant. What sort of a servant is she, and how came she to have only one eye?"

"It runs in her family," replied the cobbler, stitching busily; "they are all so one eye apiece; yet they make a very good use of it. And Polly's servant has four cousins who are blind—stone-blind; no eyes but all, and they sometimes come and help her. I've seen them in the cottage, myself, and that's how Polly gets a good deal of her money. They work for her, and she

THE SINGERS OF BREMEN.

There was once a farmer who had an old faithful ass, who had served him for many years, but was now growing weak and less useful every day. Past services were soon forgotten by some men; when present usefulness is not experienced, and the farmer only imitated the example of many of his neighbors, when he resolved to cut his ass's throat, and save his provender for some more serviceable animal; but the ass smelt mischief in the wind, and stole quietly away one summer morning toward the city of Bremen.

"The citizens of Bremen," thought he, "are good judges of music, and he would grudge me the very opportunity of any active employment, who knows but I may be chosen town musician?"

The long-eared votary of Euterpe had not travelled far before he espied a hound lying upon the roadside, breathing hard, and apparently much exhausted. "What's the matter with you, friend? why so breathless?" enquired he. "Alas," replied the hound, "because I am old and every day losing my strength and fleetness, my master will no longer provide for me. This morning he was going to knock me on the head, and he would grudge me the very straw I lie upon; so I ran away from him; but what can I now do to earn an honest livelihood for myself?"

"Why, what think you, friend," replied the ass, "canst thou far on thy way to the city of Bremen, where I will be chosen one of the waits; suppose then you were to go along with me, and try your fortune in the same way?"

The hound consented to this proposal; and so the two companions in adversity jogged on together. Not far had they two musical aspirants proceeded in company, when they perceived a cat sitting in the middle of the road, with a most rueful countenance.

"Now, what is the matter with you, madam, may I make bold to ask?" enquired the ass. "Alas," sighed the grimalkin, "I am sadly out of spirits; but how can it be otherwise when one's life is in jeopardy? Because I am getting old, as you perceive, and rather back myself all the day long before the fire than to amuse, my mistress laid hold of me this morning and would have drowned me had I not made my escape from her as she was taking me to the pond. But how am I now to earn my daily bread?"

"A company us, a Bremen, here, as you are well known to be a fine singer, you will certainly be appointed one of the city waits," rejoined the ass. "The cat to the scheme had no objection, and readily added herself to the party. Not many rods farther, as the three friends were passing, a farmer, standing upon the upper bar of a gate, screaming loudly, and apparently in great agitation.

"Bravo!" said the ass; "you have got a clear pipe and a strong eye, friend. What does all this crowing mean?"

"Ah, kind sir," replied the cock, "you behold in me one of the most unfortunate of living beings. But a little while ago I was foretelling the approach of a bad weather for our washing day, and yet my mistress and the cook gave no thanks for my pains, but threatened to cut off my head and stew my body into soup for the guests that are expected one of these days. Well, then, may I ask of you, if you will, for my voice will soon be silent enough!"

"Nay, then, my dear chauticleer, if matters have come to such a pass as this with you, the sooner you make your escape from this place the better. Come along with us to Bremen; you have got good pipes, and may get forward in the world with it."

"With all my heart," replied chauticleer; and so the four friends pursued their journey together.

They came, however, to a town where the first day, at last, they went into a wood to seek shelter for the night. The ass and the hound lay down upon the grass under a thick tree; the cat climbed up among its branches, and the cock perched himself on the top of a tall oak tree, and would be most secure. But before chauticleer could secure himself to sleep, he thought it prudent to take a survey of the surrounding country, and satisfy himself that all was safe and quiet for the night. As he was looking over a high, glimmering light discovered a little distance, and called out to his companions below:

"Methinks there must be a house no great way off, for I see something like a candle shining yonder."

"If that be the case," said the ass, "we had better change our quarters, for all is not so comfortable hereabouts as one could wish. This grass is but a poor bit." "Oh yes," added the hound, "let us look about us for other lodgings; a rough bone or a bit of meat would be a welcome sight to me."

So they all set off together in the direction of the light, which they soon discovered proceeded from a hut in which a band of robbers were enjoying themselves. The ass, being the tallest of the company, he went first to the window and peeped in.

"What do you see?" asked the cock. "What do I see?" replied the ass; "why I see a table groaning under a load of dishes, and a band of robbers seated around it, making themselves as merry as princes!"

"Such quarters would suit us amazingly well!" exclaimed the cock. "They would; but how shall we manage to procure them?" replied the ass. "After a little consultation, they at last hit upon a suitable expedient for driving the robbers away from the hut. The ass placed his fore feet upon the window lintel; the dog then placed himself upon his back; the cat scrambled up upon the dog's shoulders, and the cock perched himself upon the cat's head; and in this position when all had got fairly balanced, they struck up simultaneously a concert of such notes as nature had given to each; the ass brayed, the dog howled, the cat mew'd, and the cock crow'd; and scarcely were the robbers' ears assailed by the loud uproar, when they possessed of a comfortable apartment and excellent cheer for a whole legion of demons were forcing their way into the hut. By this ingenious maneuver, the four friends secured away the robbers, and put themselves in undisputed possession of a comfortable apartment and excellent cheer for a whole legion of demons were forcing their way into the hut.

As soon as they had completely appeased their hunger, and made themselves reasonably merry with the robbers' liquors, they put out the lights and retired to rest, each choosing the place most agreeable to himself. The ass got most agreeable to himself, and reposed his weary carcass upon the dog stretched himself out behind the door, the cat rolled herself up upon the warm hearth,

How MEN "BURST UP"—Men with unassuming wives never fail. It is the husbands of such ladies as Mrs. Dash and Lady Brilliant, who find themselves face to face with the Sheriff, and certain mysterious documents adorned with red tape and a water mark, are the target of the darts of envy.

The dame of New feminine is to outshine her neighbors, not in mental acquirements, but in gingerbread ornaments and gold-edged snuffers. If Mrs. Dash gets up a game supper, her neighbors will be the first to dust—Lady Brilliant takes the lead out of her hair by getting up another in which the prevailing dish will be birds of paradise swimming in gravy made of melted pearls. It is this rivalry, and the dabbling in railroad stock, that has led to the ruin of the best men of Wall Street. The "ill-fortune" of which they so much complain, is no more nor less than a brainless wife. If they would come back to happiness, they must direct their attention, not to the fluctuations of the stock market, but the ruinous absurdities of their wives. Thousand dollar repasts don't pay; while the merchant who purchases one hundred dollar handkerchiefs for a lack of a wife, should not wonder if the time eventually comes when a "goose of a husband" will fill his shirts, or be but ill supplied with them.

A Further Supplement to the Election Laws of this Commonwealth.

WHEREAS, By the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces and for other purposes," and approved March 3rd, 1862, section 4, of the said act, and section six, of the act approved March 3rd, 1862, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, all persons who have not been discharged or relieved from the penalty or disability therein provided, are deemed and taken to have voluntarily relinquished their rights of citizenship and their right to become citizens, and are deprived of exercising any rights of citizens thereof.
