ALMOST A DUEL.

A Romance Founded on Facts. Our regiment was stationed at Morgan's Ford. Our Colonel had been shot MONUMENTS OBELISKS AND HEAD. by an Indian guerilla, and our Lieut. Colonel had gone home sick, and so the command devolved on our Major, whose name was Farwell. He was a middle aged, dashing fellow, given to social enjoyment, and, as a general thing, keeping on pretty friendly terms with those about him. He was naturally free and easy—a fine soldier and strict disciplinarian. He was a kind hearted and generous man, though troubled with a temper that led hinsinto error at times.

Major Farwell had been in command but a few weeks, when he concluded to send for his wife to come and stay with him through the summer. He had com-

I tried to make some reply, but I could not speak coherently: I had been growing weaker and weaker, and my and when he returned he informed me that the arrangements were all made. We were to meet at seven o'clock the following morning—weapons, pistols distance, twelve paces—our seconds to toss for choice of position—to fire at the

I wrote several letters, which I sealed and enclosed in a single which I sealed and enclosed in a single envelope, to be sent off by my clerk in case I should fall. My property I gave into Walker's charge, with instructions how to dispose of it. When Enatters had been thus arranged, it was well on to evening, and taking a light cane in my hand I walked out for a breath of freely air. fresh air.

Not far from the camp were Morgan's Falls, a wild, romantic spot, where the water of the river tumbled over a huge bed of broken rocks; and towards this spot I bent my steps. Just above the falls was a bridge of logs, from which could be obtained one of the grandest scenes that ever blessed the eye. From an eminence near the falls, I saw a woman and child standing upon the bridge; but Plost them for a time, as I descended into the shrubbery.
