Select Poetry.

THE ISLES OF THE BLEST.
Who has not dreamed of the Fortunate Isles,
Those islands of bliss and rest,
That lie, as the legends tell,
In the unknown sea of the West?
Who has not yearned for the apples of gold
That hang from Ambrosial boughs?
Who has not sighed for the nectareous side
That from grove and mountain flows?
Vainly sought in the purple West,
The treacherous sea has tried;
Many a heart, with swelling sail,
Has sought the farthest shore;
And hour after hour, from dawn to dawn,
The watch has been bravely kept;
The master himself has sat the helm,
While the watchmen sleep.
But forever away,
On waves undiscovered, the islands lay.
Fragrant blossoms, and boughs of palm,
Have floated out on the tide,
And birds, with the sunset for a fair wing,
Have sailed the sunset's side;
But never more than a rosy cloud,
Half seen in the evening light,
Have brought the islands near,
The isles! the isles are in sight!
A moment more—
Gone was the cloud, the light, and the shore.
Last night a spirit spoke with me:
"Dost thou faint for the far off prize?
Is it not enough to watch and wait,
And to trust the wind that blows?
Behold the days when all bright omens tell
That the bloom of delight is near,
When the billows blossom with drifting flowers,
And the bright wind that blows,
Strike boldly on to the clouded shores!
For, by stern and mighty spirits held,
Of a strange enchantment bound,
Not a single drop of sleep shall dream,
Can win that hallowed ground.
But resolve will, and the daring hand,
In battle with angels strong,
Shall wrest those isles from the mystery
That has shrouded them so long.
After the strife,
Glorious rest in those gardens of life.
O fortunate isles! O brightening realms!
Your glories I yet may find;
But my sails are filled, I have heeded my call,
I will not leave you behind.
I have learned that waiting nor prayer will give
The triumph for which I long;
Through nobler toil and endeavor beam
The truest glory is won.
Enough, at night
I may sing: The isles! the isles are in sight!"

THE IRON VAULT.
The Lady and the Locksmith.
I live in San Francisco, and am a locksmith by trade. My calling is a strange one, and I have a great fascination, rendering it one of the most agreeable of pursuits. Many who follow it, find nothing in it but labor—think nothing but of their money, and in gold and silver, they find their only interest. I have learned that waiting nor prayer will give
The triumph for which I long;
Through nobler toil and endeavor beam
The truest glory is won.
Enough, at night
I may sing: The isles! the isles are in sight!"
