School Houses.—High taxes is a plea which will compel many a little one to shiver in an old dilapidated school house for years to come. Yet some of the townships have so much spirit, that even this plea is unavailing. Charleston, and Delmar, and Liberty, and Sullivan, as usual, take the lead. Charleston has erected one of the best houses six teachers have been examined. Over sixty of these had never taught. Twenty-five males only have been employed; nearly one hundred less than in 1860.—

All the female teachers with reasonable qualifications were employed then; yet the schools formerly taught by these one hundred young men, have to be taught now by females. The number of qualified female teachers has increased so as to supply about one-half of this defi-ciency. The others are from the "not qualified.". Some females think teachqualified." Some females think teaching is easier than house work. They go to school just enough to get the poorest certificate; and then think to make tea-ching a business. We shall not, how-ever, be troubled with them much long er. Our Normal school will soon make the supply of well qualified teachers in some degree commensurate with the demand. Labor is well paid. Schooling is cheap. With diligence and determination the poorest may be the wisest. Visitations.—The number of visits, by Mr. Elliott and myself, is greater than the number of schools in the county; but on account of the hasty change in the middle of the school year, some were visited twice, and others not at all. It is to be regretted that any should have been omitted; for when a school is not visited, it has lost the most valuable part of the Superintendent's labor. I part of the Superintendent's labor. I realized this in my recent visits more than ever before. I found many pupils in schools which I had visited seven years before, remembering almost everything I then did and said. What an opportunity to plant in these receptive minds, seed truths, which shall by and by spring up and bring forth a bountiful harves;!

This was intensely interesting to the scholars as well as to myself. I elicited some very curious and instructive statistics. Of three thousand five hundred and fifty-four male and female pulse, will weave wool satisfactorily.

THE MARKED MONEY.

A STORY OF LOVE AND LAW

John Gordon kept the "Village Tavern." Gordon was a hard-headed, stout-bodied, red-faced, jolly, humorous Scotsman. He was liberal, with an eye to the main chance. He was proud of his position as landlord, proud that his house sliould be known and spoken of in the great city of London, and particularly and trull justice to his looks. Philip Conger was a class of the fine default justice to his looks. Philip Conger was a class of the fine default justice to his looks. Philip Conger was a class of the fine conger was a class of the conger was a class of the passed away, and yet he remained a guest of "The Village Tavern." sliould be known and spoken of in the great city of London, and particularly proud that so many connoisseurs tho't it well worth their while to drive out to Another week, and Philip Conger was still there; but he no longer fished, no longer hunted, his walks and rides were shorter, and the house had more attraction. even this plea is unavailing. Charleston, and Delmar, and Liberty, and Sullivan, as usual, take the lead. Charleston has erected one of the best houses in the county. Those townships here tofore doing least in this line, of course now do nothing.

Letty Gordon had great blue eyes very blue, very large, and sparkling with suppressed mischief. Letty Gordon had light brown hair, that danced about her head, laughing all combs to scorn, and almost repudiating a ribbon. She had the whitest skin, and the whitest teeth, and the-oh! this sounds too Village Tavern' who could occasionally see Letty Gordon; but to the mass, who came and went like shadows, Letty was were not long in finding out. tial to the success of "The Village Tavern," and that if its landlord did not understand when he had a good and faithful servitor, she knew enough that would, and to these she would go. Martha Field set him at defiance, and still continued, with the aid of David Bigelow, to carry the letters of the lovers. It was one evening in the early autumn, following a day that John Gordon and old Brown had been engaged in numberless consultations. The plot seemed to thicken, and those who had been peering about until they knew more of the matter than the actors themselves, said that it was near its catastro-

The habitual redness had deserted John Gordon's face; it was pale instead -very pale for John Gordon. He step-ped more quickly that night than was his custom from the bar to the parlor, and so up stairs to where Letty and Martha sat. Those who spoke of it af-terwards, said that many things passed that evening that were strange, but were not thought of in that way until the next day. They said that soon after dark a rower in a skiff, looking very like the one Philip Conger was sometimes soon in consecutive the same times. times seen in, came slowly up the river, and lay for some minutes under the great willow that grew at the foot of the garden; and one of these gossips, living on the opposite side, says he saw this single rower leave his skiff, and stand under the willow, where in a few mo-ments he was joined by one in a light nestly talking. They could see that the landlord's face grew dark, whenever such intelligence was brought him, and those who were most about the house and parted—the skiff and its single rower returning the same way that it came.

Another equally as veritable, two hours later saw a carriage and horses, entirely unknown in that part of the country, traveling at great speed on the road towards London, and declared this carriage to contain a lady and gentle-man, who, with corroborating circumstances, were believed to be Philip Conger and Letty Gordon.

Those who were nearer home saw that same evening a cart drawn up in front of "The Village Tavern," with old con-stable Brown as its driver. They saw much like an auctioneer's summary.—

I shall end it by saying that she was just the merriest, sweetest, and most enticing little fairy I have ever seen, and I am not, alone in so believing. There a most stable, from parlor to cellar.

I shall end it by saying that she was just the merriest, sweetest, and most enticing little fairy I have ever seen, and I am not, alone in so believing. There from bar to stable, from parlor to cellar. Something there was in the wind more pressed out of the barroom for that purpose, saw Martha Field, John Gordon around and abroad for the cause, and and old Brown drive away together were not long in finding out. There, from "The Village Tavern;" Martha without bonnet or shawl, and with a calm, scornful look; John Gordon with white face, and pale, tight shut lips; and old Brown with a complacent expression of face, that would leave the impression with all who did not know him, that he had just performed one of the most benevolent and praiseworthy of actions.
