A SOUTHERN PRISON.

Florence, but a short time since a gar- rison post, has been abandoned by the United States forces, but will ever be memorable as the famous, or rather in- famous South Carolina prison pen, cor- responding to Andersonville, Georgia.

The cemetery enclosure, containing about four acres. When left by the rebels it was uninclosed, but has since been surrounded, I think, by direction of the Quartermaster of Charleston, by a substantial board fence, five feet high, with a cap, and all well whitewashed.

These numbers, together with the inscriptions above referred to, led me to believe that records of the same had been kept, probably by one of the officers in charge of the pen; but if so, they have yet failed to appear, unless through the fear of prosecution of a Capt. Wirz.

Workmen are now engaged in replacing mangled headboards, by erecting new ones in their stead. These are painted white and numbered to correspond with those removed.

Three hundred yards away is still another enclosure, though smaller, con- taining some 400 graves, similar in re- spect to those above referred to, thus making in all nearly 3,000 graves of our, as yet, "unknown dead."

We now come to the prison pen, the cause, in all probability, of the majority of these burials, which is a quarter of a mile away, and consists of about twenty acres, of oblong shape, and a little more than half as wide as it is long, divided into two parts by a small stream, with marshy, muddy banks.

Even the stream running through the enclosure, from which our poor prisoners got all their water, was first polluted by them, they being encamped above, though good water was to be bountifully had but a short distance away. Here was an abundance of pine trees, which can be had here now for the asking, but were cruelly denied our men, though urgent requests were made for them.

To give these funds a little credit, I mention a sort of hut or cabin, constructed of pine, in the north end of this enclosure, for hospital purposes; also a few huts, made with poles, &c., covered with turf, but these were not beneath them. Calling even this tolerable, it is the common testimony of the people here that they were half starved and in rags; in winter sweltering and roasting, and in summer shivering over a few sorry embers, which were un- limited forest was around them. Had there been no woods here, there might have been some excuse; but this section abounds with pine, even within a hundred yards of the pen, and every- body is welcome to cut as much as they please.

From these 3,000 to 15,000 prisoners thrust into this living hell, to roast, to freeze, to starve, to die, came the 2,378 martyrs for the Union, whose burial places have attempted to describe. This was the "Southwest" of the Con- federacy, and in the 19th century! I can only wonder why these worse than demons have not been arrested ere this, and compelled to suffer for such enormous outrages, perpetrated on our poor, unfortunate soldiers.

A traveler passing through our town asked our livery stable man how much corn was usually raised in this part of the country. He told him there was generally raised from fifteen to twenty bushels to the acre, and each stalk had three ears on it, and was twelve or fifteen feet high.
