What secret is it that is to be so religiously kept?" asked Mr. Frank Evans, coolly walking into the midst of the discussion, with his dark hair tossed about by the wind, and his hazel brown eyes sparkling archly.

The reputation of the English press is well founded. Intellect and culture, of no ordinary standard, have been for more than half a century elements of English Journalism, which in no country are surpassed, while its energy in procuring news is not equaled in Europe. Of all the English papers The Times is unquestionably the leader, and, therefore, the representative of European Journalism, How remarkably that Journalism differs from the American would be an interesting com-parison, involving a nice balance of advantages, but at present we merely desire to show, for the entertainment

Let us take up The Times of September 19, the latest number received in this city. Its pages are the same size as those of THE TRIGUE: its columns the same length and width: the type about the same size. Exclusive of advertisements. The Times contains 41 columns of reading matter, of considerable variety, and much of it well-written. It furnishes less than a col umn of military and naval intelligence; five columns of Reports of Markets, Railway and Mining shares, &c. To a review of Borchgrave's history of Belgian Colon which there are but three, upon Napoleon's Circular the Act for limiting liability in Partnerships, and the Established Church in Ireland. It publishes foreign letters from three capitals—Paris, Berlin and Vienna—making in all four columns. The same number are used for its legal and police reports. An inquiry into election thribery cases exhausts three more columns. Of telegrams it prints less than a single column. This is considerable reading for eight cents in specie. THE TRIBUNE of nearly the same date published 42 columns of reaching matter. It gave the public for four
