Miscellaneous.

SO IT IS IN RUSSIA. A CAPITAL SKETCH. I resided in Russia many years, and I must in justice, say that I thoroughly enjoyed my life in that country.

As the season was almost too far advanced for traveling, the young people petitioned that they might be married in England; and we at last consented.

With the promise that they were to pay for the wedding, and for the honeymoon, I consented to their going.

At first I thought he must have imbibed too freely of the sparkling wines in the refreshment saloon, but then I remembered that they were hardly home.

I was astonished by the old adage, "At first I thought he must have imbibed too freely of the sparkling wines in the refreshment saloon, but then I remembered that they were hardly home."

"I should scarcely trouble to carry a gun," said the young man, "for every one has seen your face, so that you cannot disguise yourself, even if you put it on. Pray! why are you looking so mystified?"

"I repeated the words of my visitor, and he said, 'I am not mystified, though I knew they were of no consequence.'"

"I disagree with you," remarked my friend, "these words must have been intended as a warning, know that you are a young man, and that you are a young man, and that you are a young man."

"Oh! nonsense!" he answered; but the Count persisted. He reminded me that he was a young man, and that he was a young man, and that he was a young man.

"Very well," I said, and turned away. In half an hour's time I met my friend, who whispered that he wished to join him in the library, which we found deserted.

"I have been corroborated," said the Count; "you are suspected, and will be seized to-morrow, or at any moment, if you show any signs of departure."

"You must quit St. Petersburg to-night," said the Count; "I will leave my wife and children in the whippersnapper of some spy, and I will leave my wife and children in the whippersnapper of some spy."

"I do not wish you to leave your wife and children in the whippersnapper of some spy, and I will leave my wife and children in the whippersnapper of some spy."

"The Count's argument, had some effect, and I inquired what had best be done. 'Exchange dresses with me,' was the answer; 'but first order your people to pack a hamper full of eatables, on the plea of a surprise for the children, and take them with you, or possibly you may all be on the road to Siberia before you are aware, and it will be small comfort to you to know that you have done nothing wrong, and that perhaps, in twenty years, you may be acquitted.'"

INDIAN SUMMER. It has been said, as common-place as truly, that 'a cat may grow plump on a king and so, perchance, who chooses to do so, may grow fat on a king's bounty.'

But a narrow rift in Autumn's clouds, thro' which the soft sun gleams just now appears, a burst of sunlight thro' the gloom that shrouds the year.

With June the blue-eyed, June the Summer Queen, With June the blue-eyed, June the Summer Queen, With June the blue-eyed, June the Summer Queen.

Both field and forest in autumn moon: And the birds come not as then, to tune Nature's great harp, and sanctify the scene, We love them best the least we see, June with its birds and Autumn with its time.

The latest joy we mortals love the best: Summer's last hour, lovelier than the first; The miser claps her last-born to her breast; Most precious heart-flow' that she ever nursed; The miser drops his last gain in the chest. As best of all (and yet 'tis most accursed): So, they are we, we see the year decay, Loving it better as it fades away. M. H. Conz.

A LAWYER WITH TWO CHARACTERS. One cold evening in November, ten years ago, a large black cloak knocked at the door of Mons. Dubin, one of the most able advocates of Paris.

He entered, and drawing from under his cloak a large package of documents, laid them on the table. "Monsieur," he said, "I am rich; but a lawsuit, which is commenced against me, may ruin me utterly. At my age a lost fortune is not to be remade. The loss of this suit, therefore, would constitute the most frightful misery. I come to implore your assistance in the papers which explain my claims."

The able advocate listened attentively to the unknown visitor, then, opening the bundle of documents; he went through them with the searching rapidity of his professional eye. "They were at last laid upon the table. The action which is commenced against you for this property," said the lawyer, "is based upon justice and right legal and moral. But, unfortunately, in spite of the admirable elaboration of our code, law and justice do not always go together, and here the law is on your side. If, therefore, you resign your case upon the law, and use without reserve all its technicalities and quibbles, and if the legal points in your favor are all clearly established, the court will inevitably gain your cause."

"No man living," said the stranger, "can do what you describe so ably as yourself. Might I venture to hope that you would reduce your legal opinion to writing, and thus render me invaluable?"

The advocate reflected a minute or two, and then taking up again the documents which at the first word of the request, he had pushed away, he said he would do so, and that he would be ready on the morrow, at the same hour, the legal opinion would be ready.

"The client was punctual. The paper was presented to him, accompanied with a demand for a copy made, for a fee of three thousand francs!"

He stood mute with astonishment. "You are at liberty to keep your money," said the lawyer, "and I am at liberty to show my written opinion into the fire."

Advancing towards the chimney apparently for the purpose, he was stopped by the visitor. "I will pay the sum," he said, "but I must give you my written acceptance for it."

"The money in gold," said the advocate, "or you shall not have a line!"

"The client said that it was inevitable, and taking his leave for the moment returned soon with the coin. He paid it—but, in revenge, after gaining his cause, he told the story in every corner of Paris. The journals got hold of it. It was soon as universal as the name and fame of the great lawyer; and as lamentations were made by the editors over the grasping advantage thus taken of a client in his extremities, and even friends expressed their regrets to him for his conduct, he was obliged to return soon with the coin.
