In fact, he now thinks that the trial of Jeff. Davis would result in more evil than good. We confess that this is a new view of the result of enforcing the penal code. We had supposed that the law was the dread of evil doers, and that the vindication of law, by the arraignment and trial, conviction, and punishment of offenders, was salutary. We had snpposed that no greater harm could befall a law than that it should be habitually disregarded. But here is a man of unquestionable integrity and moral excellence, who regards the infraction of the law as less, perilous to society than its vindication.

accepting the responsibility of all the matters for which Gen. C. had been of events, to show how wisely and uprightly he acted. And he could well afford to wait; for never has a man come out from under reproach, so com-pletely justified. The Nation now, looks to his efforts in the War Department as not only being wise and up-right, but can see that had his advice and efforts been properly appreciated and seconded, the Rebellion would have been earlier crushed.

"Familiar with Southern men, and cognizant of their desires and intentions, from his shrewd estimate of the character of the Southern leaders, Gen. CAMERON early recognized the purposes for which the Rebellion was inaugurated, and saw that the struggle would not be over, until the cause was exterminated. An early and consistent Free-soiler, he had marked the usurpations of the Slave oligarchy, until their arrogance had ended in the treason that struck a deadly blow at our free insti-His sagacious mind early rectutions. ognized the fact that their property in man was the weakness or strength of the Rebellion, as it was treated by the Loyal nation. He was the earliest ad-vocate, amongst public men, of the policy and justice of arming the blacks. His report, as Secretary of War, in De-cember, 1861, in favor of that measure, stands a prouder monument to his sense of justice, to his patriotism, his far-sighted sagacity, and his boldness, than could have been erected by other hands.-The Nation owes him a debt of grati-tude for the Report, which can never be adequately discharged. For that bold act of justice and statesmanship, he was obliged to retire from President LINCOLN'S cabinet, borne down by the outcry, from the timid, time-serving Conservatives of the country, leaving behind him such men as SEWARD. WELLS and BLAIE, whose names have since become offensive to the people. The state of Pennsylvania ows it as a simple act of justice to SIMON CAM-ERON, that he should be honored by some signal proof of the confidence and gratitude of her people. He has earned it, by arduous and wisely-directed efforts to put down the Rebellion. He deserves it, from his ample experience in public affairs, from his familiarity with the needs of the Nation, and from his devotedness to the interests of the Commonwealth."

SHELDON'S COMPOSITION FOR FRUIT TREES.—A correspondent at Troy, Pa., asks us relative to P. B. Sheldon's composition for the destruction of borers and other insects on fruit trees. On inquiry we learn from reliable parties in Steuben county, that the composition has been tested in that section and is approved. Though at first inclined to look upon it as a nostrum, the testimony before us-mainly elicted by our inqui-ries-is such that (with the addition of a knowledge of the ingredients of the composition) we are inclined to regard the preparation of Mr. Sheldon as valuable. The composition, which has been patented, in advertised in this paper.—Moore's Rural Tew-Yorker.

IT is given out from Washington that the President declares his determination to make no more removals, as the appointing of "Democrats" does not pay. Very probably the President has said so, but his character for veracity does not warrant one in attaching much importance to it.

We must ask those who may read Mr. Greeley's article to consider certain facts, among which are these :

1. That the existence of laws for the restraint and punishment of evilminded persons presupposers a community composed of law-abiding people, 2. That a community of law-abiding people will uphold courts in arraigning crimnals and enforcing penalties. 3. That in such a community the vindication of wholesome laws, as against the malice of rogues and villains, is just as requisite to the continuance of moral health, as cleanliness is requisite to the physical health of crowded cities. 4. That if there be any whose passions will be rekindled by the enforcement of law made for the protection of society, they will be found to be either lawbreakers, or apologists for such. 5. That this class of people have no likes or dislikes, touching law, which | tard plaster-good for a few applications, when the friends of law and order are bound to respect. We write this, not for Mr. Greeley, but for those who will read his letter. Mr. Greeley's vagaries are just as real to him as the solid earth. They are not so tangible to us, and we shall treat them as vagaries, harmless enough as such, but prolific of evil if taken as realities. A great deal has been said about mercy. We have as merciful impulses as anybody. We would prefer that nobody should be fined, imprisoned, or hung; but how much more certainly do we prefer that nobody should incur the penalties named? However, here is the world. It has many rogues, and they must be re-they must not fail to punish. If Mr. Greeley's belief be founded on truth, then courts must consult the fra- suffrage.
