Mr BUCKALEW. I did not intend to say anything on this abject, and should not do so now if I were not required to go upon the record. I am very much surprised at the character of this report from the committee of conference. I had no expectation that our committee would have been able to obtain from the committee of the House's o many concessions to those opinions, which have heretofore obtained in the Senate. I think that the report is much more fayorable than could have been reasonably expected, considering the constitution of the House branch of this committee of conference; and that in very many respects the results of the deliberations of the committee are worthy of commendation. But, sir, when I am to go upon the record on this report, when I am called upon to assent to the final passage of this measure, containing certain provisions upon which I have heretofore spoken, and which are ad-horrent to my ideas in regard to the power of Congress and in regard to the public policy of the country, I am com-pelled to vote in the negative. I should not have undertaken myself to make upthe record, but as it is to be made up, I think that my duty to myself and my public convictions require me to vote in the negative. Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I did not intend to say a word on this subject, and I shall only say one or two, words now. I regret very much that my colleague is not able to vote for this report. I am glad to arrive at any decision here which will bring this Union together again; and I have thought that was the desire of my colleague also. In my judgment if the executive officer of the Government had let well enough alone we should not have been called here now, and there would have been no necesity for another bill on this subject. I want the Union restored; but I want those people who have been in rebellion and who have brought all this trouble upon the country to know that they have done wrong. If they had been let alone after the surrender of Lee, I am sure it would not have been necessary for us to pass any of these bills that are called reconstruction bills. I think, too, that if their officious friends, their unwise friends, had let well enough alone since the last adjournment of Congress, it would have been better for them, and perhaps better for the coun

Now, sir, I vote for this measure with the desire that it shall be the end of our legislation on the subject; but if the people of the South are not content with the clemency of Congress, then I say I hope we shall come back again and give them something else. They have been gright to expect the elemency with which Congress has treated them. When I look back to the history of other countries I find that for the time of the Stuarts it was the Parliament which saved the liberties of the people; and I am satisfied now that it is the representatives of the people who are going to save the liberties of this country. I dislike all this mawkishness which we hear about constitutional questions. What mockery to hear prating about the Constitution from the nouths of those who have disregarded the Constitution; who sought not only before the world: who were not only disgraceful in their conduct, in their injuries to their fellow-citizens, but to the whole world. And these people have no claim to governmental rights except what the people of the North are willing to extend to them. I think one of the grandest spectacles which I ever read of in history has been that justice which has lately been meted out to subvert the liberties of that country. I believe that if we had been a little more positive in our acts of justice at the close of this war we should not have had the trouble we now have.

I have only got to say, Mr. President, that I approve of this bill. I would have taken the bill of the Senate, or I would have taken the bill of the House. Either of them was strong enough for me. Either of them, I think, would save us from any Turther trouble. And I repeat again, if this does not satisfy the people who were in rebellion, I shall be willing to come back and try to legislate them into the Union.

Gas Light for the Million

THE attention of our readers is called to a new and very useful invention for the burning of the Carbon or Petroleum Oils—Andrew's Patent Gas Generator. The Generator can be used on any ordinary Lamp. It saves thirty-three pronts of oil, and gives a brilliant, odorless light. The smoke and superfluous carbon being consumed, it constitutes by far the best sick-room lamp ever used. No chimneys are used, hence no breakage and expense in that line. It will not the light of the constitute of the line. "blow out," nor can it get out of order. It can not explode, and is always safe and convenient besides being the cheapest and best gas light in use. The citizens of this town and vicinity and now being supplied with the Generator, and so opportunity for obtaining it will be effered to every family in the county.

The Company wishes to secure a limited num-ber of good men to sell Generators, and Town and County Rights, to whom the most liberal inlucements are offered. For particulars, address July 17-3w* KSHINKA & HUCKELL,
