THE SWING IN THE APPLE TREE The sunbeams come, the sunbeams go, The boughs droop gently over ;

Licar the breezes laughing low, Among the bloomless clover, A-swinging to and fro, I pass Through leaves that Autumn dapples, And watch, upon the fading grass, The fall of russet apples.

I listen for the babbling creek That stirs the noonday quiet; Of Summer gone, its quavers speak, Of flag flowers running riot. O lonely creek, your shallow brink, Another spring will grow them, For flowers bloom full sweet, I think, Whore'er the angels sow them? I hear across the medew lots The sheep bells softly tingle-They crop the tender daisy plots,

That frosts begin to wringle, I gannot see one katydid Of all that make this wrangle, I wonder if they hadn't hid Among the love-in-tangle?

A kildeer cries above my head; The branch boneath him quivers, And downward through the sunlight red, A golden apple shivers. My swing goes up, my swing comes down,; The cophyra hurry, after;

Down the abrupt, rock-covered western slope we slowly wound our way; forests of pine and spruce. While on the mountain side we passed long trains ing to see with what almost human unpath, where often a single mis-step would hurl them hundreds of feet into the rocky chasms below. Often valuable instruments will be carried on their backs over rugged mountains—the persons making scientific, observations well knowing that they are, safer thus than when in their own hands.

If the camel is called the "Ship c the Desert," the mule should be called the "balloon of the mountains," for apparently nothing, not having wings, or the properties of a balloon, can reach places where they will readily go.
Night found us at the miners' camp on Bear creek, a tributary of the Snake, and just as the morning sun was rising over the snow-capped mountains to ward the cast, we left their rude but hospitable homes, and followed a faint trail down the Snake to its junction with the Blue river. And here I may remark that, as a class, no more generous and honest men can be found than are these hardy miners whose cabins are in every valley where the precious metal can be gathered. Too ready, perhaps, to use the knife or revolver, ever in their belt for offense, real or fancied, they are equally as ready to forget all animosities when justice is rendered, and ever willing to share their blanket and often scanty fare with those who are in want. Rough and uncultured though often they may be, they are the men required to clear the way for the more enlightened class who follow them. And when the richly dressed adventurer just from the east looks with contempt on the bronzed miner with his soiled buckskin suit, he looks on one very often his superior in all the qualities that constitute true manhood.

EARNING A WIFE

"And so you want to marry my daughter, young man," said farmer Blifkins, removing his pipe from his mouth, and looking at the young fellow sharply from head to toe. Despite his rather indolent, effemi-Despite his rather indolent, effeminate air, which was mainly the result of his education, Luke Jordan was a fine-looking fellow, and not easily moved from his self-possession; but he colored and grew confused beneath that sharp, scrutinizing look.

"Yes, sir. I spoke to Miss Mary last evening and she referred me to you."

The old man's face softened.

"Molly is a good girl, a very good."

"Molly is a good girl, a very good girl," he said, stroking his chin with a thoughtful air, "and she deserves a good husband. What can you do?"

The young man looked rather blank. at his abrupt inquiry.

"If you refer to my ability to support a wife, I can assure you—"

"I know that you are a rich man, Luke Jordan, but I take it for granted that that you ask my girl to marry you, not your property. What guarantee can you give me, in case it should be swept away-as it is in thousands of instances —that you could provide for her a com-fortable home? You have hands and brains—flo you know how to use them?

Again I ask, what can you do?"
This was a style of catechism for which Luke was quite imprepared, and he stared blankly at the questions, without speaking.
"I believe that you managed to get through college—have you any profes-"No, sir; I thought "

"And you want to marry my daugh, tor"" resumed the old man, after a few vigorous putis of his pipe. "Now I've given Molly as good advantages for learning as any girl in town and she hasn't thrown 'em away; but it she didn't know how to work, she'd be no daughter of mine. If I chose, I could keep more than one servant | but I don't, no more than I choose that my daughter should be a pale, spiritless creature, full of dyspepsia and all manner of fine-lady ailments, instead of the smiling, brighteyed, rosy-cheeked lass she is. I did say that she should marry no lad that had been cursed with a rich father; but what old Milton said about the mind being its own place, and in itself able to make a heaven of its abode. I'm their hands and knees between the ally foind fault."

"Yes, you may depend upon it, your busy man is the happiest, for I've seen it again and again. The greatest punishment vou can inflict upon a man is of the pursuers, who crawled on their hands and knees between the ridges one going one way, the other another way, while to my astonishment it is situated finds an outlet, mountains ber line, and which are generally covered with a rich father; but of early winter bury them beneath its many feet of snow. As the old man said this, he deliberately knocked the asies out of his pipe against one of the pillars of the porch where he was sitting, tucked it into his vest pocket, and went into the house.
Pretty Mary Blifkins was waiting to see her lover down at the garden gate, their usual trysting place. The smiling right faded from her eyes as she noticed his sober discomfited look.
"Father means well," she said as

Luke told her the result of his applica-"And I'm not sure but what he is about right," she 'resumed, after a thoughtful pause, "for it seems to me hat every man, be he rich or poor ought to have some occupation." Shen, as she noticed her lover's grave look, she added softly:

"Nevermind; I'll wait for you, Luke."

Luke Jordan suddenly disappeared from his accustomed haunts, much to the surprise of his gay associates. But, wherever he went, he carried with him in his exile these words, and which were like a tower of strength to his soul, "I'll wait for you Luke!" One pleasant, sunshiny morning, late in October, as farmer Blifking was propping up the grape-vine in his front yard, that threatened to break down with the asy, leisurely movements.

"Good morning, Mr. Blifkins. I understood that you wanted to buy some butter tubs and cider barrels. I think I have some here that will just suit you."
"Whose make are they?" inquired the old man, as, opening the gate, he paused

"Mine," replied Luke, with an air of pardonable pride, and I challenge any cooper in the State to best them." Mr. Blifkins examined them critically one by one.

"They'll do," he said, coolly, as he set down the last of the lot. "What will ye take for them?"

"What I asked you for six months ago to-day—the hand of your daughter, by the wagon.

The roguish twinkle in the old mau's eyes broadened into a smile.
"You've got the right metal in you after all," he cried. "Come in, lad come in. I shouldn't wonder if we made a trade after all."

Nothing loth, Luke obeyed. "Molly!" bawled Mr. Blifkins, thrusting his head into the kitchen door. Molly tripped out into the entry. The round, white arms were bared above the elbows, and bore traces of the flour she had been sifting. Her dress was a neat gingham, over which was tied a blue checked apron; but she ooked as winning and lovely as she always did wherever she was found. She blushed and smiled as she saw Luke, and then, turning her eyes upon her father, waited, dutifully, to hear what he had to say. The old man regarded his daughter for a moment with a quizzical look. "Molly this young man-mayhar you've seen him before-has brought -me a lot of tubs and barrels, all of his own make—a right good article, too. He asks a pretty steep price for 'em; but if you are willing to give it, well and good; and hark ye, my girl, what-ever bargain you make, your old father will ratify."

As Mr. Blifkins said this, he considerately stepped out of the room, and we will follow his example. But the kind of bargain the young people made can be readily conjectured by the speedy wedding that followed.
