PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE. The great length of the Message pre-tice, however: The President opens by saying that the continued disorganization of the Union, to which the President has so often called the attention of Congress, is yet a subject of profound and patriotic concern. He says: "It is therefore a source of profound regret, in complying with the obligation imposed upon the President by the Constitution, to give Congress from time to time information of the state of the Union, I am unable to communicate any definitive adjustment satisfactory to the American people of the questions which, since the close of the Rebellion, have agitated the public mind. On the contrary, candor compels me to declare that at this time there is no Union, as our fatheers understood the term, and as they meant it to be understood by us. The Union which they established can exist only where all the States are represented in both Houses of Congress." To the President, the process of restoration seems perfectly plain and seimple. It consists merely in a faithful applica-tion of the Constitution and laws. The execution of the laws is not how obstructed by physical force. There is no military or other necessity, real or pre-tended, which can prevent obedience to the Constitution either North or South, All the rights and all the obligations of States and individuals can be protected and enforced by means perfectly consistent with the fundamental law. It is clear to his apprehension that the States lately in rebellionare still members of the National Union. When harders of Soonesian adopted by a porportion—in most of their citizens were more nullities. If we admit now that they nullities. If we admit now that they were valid and effectual for the purpose intended by their authors, we sweep from under our feet the whole ground upon which we justified the war. The President claborates these views at great length, and then says: "Being sincerely convinced that these fews are correct, I would be unfaithful to my duty if I did not recommend the reten of the Southern States under the domination of military masters. If referred to are not only a violation of the National faith, but in direct con-flict with the Constitution of fine not permit myself to doubt that you will immediately strike them from the start,

The President proceeds to say that he has no desire to save from the just and proper consequence, of their crime, those who engaged in the facellion, but as a mode of punishment the measures under consideration are the most unreasonable that could be invented.— Many of these people are specifically in nocent, and of those who are guilty with their own coment the degrees of guilt are as various as their , shade of character and temper. But these net, of Congress confound them all together in one common doom.
