And ere a man hath power to say, be The jaws of darkness do devour it up. If, perchance, a gallant captain of the army has either the vanity, or the want of will, to be seduced by the slimy embraces of this Democratic love, its effect upon the recipient is worse than the fable of the Gorgon Sisters, of whom I believe it is said in mythology, that serpents sprouted from the heads of all upon whom they looked. The Democratic love of these modern days either deserts or destroys its victims. I beg pardon, there is one class of individuals who constitute a notable and entire exception to the rule I have stated. They are the vile traitors. If the gentleman is correctly reported. in the debate of yesterday, for the "gallant Lee" and his comrades Democratic love endures forever; it never fails. Mr. Speaker looking at the Constitution, about which our friends on the other side of the House vaunt so much that they love, read simply that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors and other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for. I infer, sir, that the power vested in the Senate of the United States to advise and counsel in relation to the appoint ing of officers, implies the right to the continuation and effective operation of their advice and counsel. It is nugatory, sir, to insert a provision in the or-rent control in relation to any subordinate position, and shall assist in earry ing out the laws of the country. Mr. JENKS. Will the gentleman allow himself to be interrogated / Suppose the Secretary of War should be come insane. Congress not being in session, would it not be the duty of the President of the United States to remove such officer and supply his place for the time being?

Mr. STRANG. I think the remark shall exercise a controlling voice in the appointment of officers of the Federal Government, but that after the appointment is made and confirmed their advice is to have no effect. I infer that I was about to make will fully answer the gentleman. Turning again to the Constitution I read, "Congress shall else, but guess the have the power to make all laws which of Mr. Chanler. shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Con stitution in the Government of the officer thereof." If, sir, I am correct in the position that the provision relating to the advice and consent of the Senate in the appointment of officers, fairly implies that their judgment is to be consulted in regard to continuance in office, then I submit to the sober judgthe provision of the section I have just read, of the power of Congress to make office of those persons.

In pursuance of this plain provision of the Constitution, Congress did pass what is known as the tenure of office bill, the substance of which was simply that although the President might have power, during intervals in the sessions of Congress, to suspend for any cause any officer in the exercise of the func-tions of his office, yet he should have no power to remove, except for reasons which should be submitted to the consideration of the Senate. President Johnson recognized the validity of that law; he suspended Secretary Stanton from the exercise of the duties of his gressional provision to which I have referred.

low himself to be interrogated. Suppose the President of the United States should remove a person from office for sufficient reason, and afterwards, when Congress assemble, they restore him, is not that on the part of the Senate the exercise of the appointing power, and if so, is it not clearly unconstitutional?
Mr. STRANG. My answer to the gentleman is that where an officer is once appointed by virtue of a constitutional provision, by and with the ad- a dozen b'hoys, either one of whom vice and consent of the Senate, a refus- would accomodate him with a lovely al to concur in the reasons for his re-

I was going on to say that in the full recognition of the validity, not only of this constitutional provision, but of the act of Congress, President Johnson did on the thirteenth day of December, 1867, send to the Senate of the United States the evidence and the reasons upon which he based his suspension of Secretary Stanton from his official position. And in the process of time, in obedience as I hold not only to the organic law, but to the act of Congress, e suspension of Secretary Stanton .position taken by the Senate, and very to him during all this time. The gentleman from Berks [Mr. Jones] felicitated himself very much upon the proud position which the Democratic party occupies here. If there is anything in the position of the country to day out of which the gentleman or his colleagues can gather any good omen for the future of the party which they so ably represent here, they are welcome to it all. For my own part, with a loyal Republican Congress, with a Republican Legislature in this State, and with not the "gallant Lee," but the loyal General Grant, as the stand-ard bearer of the Republican party, I. feel no fear whatever of the future. grant you, and I wish what I may say upon this question might have its effect upon the people of this State, everywhere—I grant you that, for certain reasons, the confidence of the loyal people of this country in the Republican party has, to a certain extent, been fulling—has, to a certain extent, been frittered away by the settion. ered away by the action of Congress.-I do not wonder at it, when a Congress and Senate of the United States stand idly by and see the greatest captain of the age, the gallant Phil. WELLSBORO, PENN'A. WEDNESDAY, FEB. 5, 1868.

The first gun of the campaign has done great execution. At an election to fill the vacancy created by the death | speak out? of Mr. Hamilton, member of Congress from the 8th District of Ohio, held on the 27th of January, Gen. John Beatty, the Republican Candidate, was elected by over a thousand majority. The mafor Governor, in the same district, was 246 only-showing a Republican gain of 800 since October last. The bravest men left-living by rebel bullets and commissary whisky are, without doubt, members of Congress, or the Pennsylvania Legislature. The greatest, and most innocuous of private citizens often becomes as "jealous of honor and sudden and quick in quarrel.2 as the caballeros of sunny Spain, or the negro-wolldpers of the deveastated South. It is not many days since Mr. Chanler, as mild a mannered man as ever cut a throat or scuttled a ship, apparently, flew into a terrible passion at Mr. Julian, another scholarly gentleman, who more resembles a divinity student than a duelist; and Mr. Chanan invitation to a field where four fools meet, two shoot, and more or less run away.
