At Nevada Falls the river tumbles seven hundred feet in swaying mistiness. It is fitly named, for the water is white as snow drift. Near the bottom it strikes an inlined plane or apron of the rock, spreading into a sheet of floating silver tissue, 130 feet wide, then breaking into delicate snowy net work, with myriads of shining beads and sparkling threads -an exqusite silken fringe on the great white curtain. The South Fork Fall shoots over the precipice for 730 feet in a descent unbroken until just before it reaches the basin below. But the Yosemite itself is the monarch of cascades. With only a single break it leaps 2,634 eet. It is far the loftiest in the world. Think of a cascade-for it is less than twenty feet wide at the summit-of more than half a mile? It is sixteen imes higher than Niagara. In spring it has great volume; but during summer it is one vast incredible height .-The floor of the beautiful valley is threaded by the shifting river and car-peted with rich grass, and mysterious myriads of wild flowers, including prinnoses of yellow and crimson, and the Ithurici Spear of exquisite purple. It is tringed with spreading oaks, and dotted with slender, symmetrical pines, which sometimes rise nearly 300 feet dwarfing men and buildings beneath their branches the merest pigmies. On the whole, the Yosemite Valley is in-comparably the most wonderful feature of our continent. European travelers agree that trans-Atlantic scenery has nothing at all approaching it. Unless the unexplored Himalayas hide some rival, there is no spot the wide world over of such varied beauty and measureless grandeur.
