His Letter to General Buckner. HEADQUARTERS ARMY IN THE FIELD, Camp near Fort Donelson, Feb. 18, 1862. To Gen. S. B. Buckner, Confederate Army: Yours of this date, proposing an armistice and appointment of commissioners to settle terms of capitulation, is just received. No other terms than an unconditional and immediate surrender can be accepted. I propose to move immediately upon your works. I am, sir, very respectfully, your obe-dient servant, U.S. GRANT,

His Speech Accepting the Nomination Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the National Union Convention: I will endeavor in a very short time to write you a letter accepting the trust you have imposed upon me. [Applause.] Expressing the gratitude for the confidence you have placed in me, I will now say but little orally, and that is to thank you for the unanimity with which you have selected me as a candidate for the Presidential office. I can say, in addition, I looked on during the progress of the proceedings at Chicago with a great deal of interest, and am gratified with the harmony and unani mity which seem to have governed the deliberations of the Convention. In chosen to fill the high office for which you have selected me, I will give to its duties the same energy, the same spirit and the same will that I have given to the performance of all duties which have devolved upon me heretofore.— Whether I shall be able to perform these duties to your entire satisfaction, time will determine. You have truly said, in the course of your address, that I shall have no policy of my own to enforce against the will of the people. His Letter of Acceptance.

On that day the Union soldiers and sailors in the field were truly America herself. Their defeat would have been an incalculable disaster for the country, for liberty, for civilization. The duty of every generous, patriotic man was plain. It was to join in sending to the front one great, hearty, sublime chorus of sympathy and encouragement, that the brave men might know in the midst of the sharp strug-gle that they were in the minds and hearts and upon the prayerful lips of their brethren at home. Upon that day as now there was a great Democratic meeting at the Academy of Music close to the new Tam-many Hall. Chief among the speakers was Horatio Seymour, then Gover-nor of the State, and now as then one of the chief leaders of his party. He said that the authorities which were damental principles of the Government from the lawful authorities; that the arrest of Vallandigham for exhorting active resistance to recruiting the armies in the field was the destruction of every precious right of American citizens, and that the only hope of the country against anarchy and ruin was and ignorant of men in a moment of might be urged by a mob as well as by a Government: and then sneeringly
