We found Oceola all right, but the Cowanesque had disappeared, leaving a broad channel of silt very warm water. The village is growing finely; and we noticed several buildings of concrete completed and in course of completion-the only structures of the kind, we presume, in the county. We found an attentive host, a good dinner, and a quiet place at the Oceola House.

Speaking of Farmington: What use do the farmers intend to make of the Canada Thistle which threatens to become the main crop on some and sow the stubble with sait. And again: We saw but one water-trough between Potter's and Oceola; that one entitles the owner to the gratitude of merciful men and horses.
