State Convention from this District was awarded to Clinton County. J. C. STRANG, Clerk. PARTON'S GREELEY. - Everybody has heard of Horace Greeley, for nearly everybody takes the Tribune; but whoever has no read Parton's Life of Greeley has yet to know the veteran editor as he deserves to be known. It is the record of a man who from poverty has risen to the first place in American journalism, with little assistance from others. The new edition just issued is materially enlarged. It contains an interesting record of Mr. Greeley's public life and acts during the last fourteen years, with notes of his trip across the continent. his correspondence with Mr. Lincoln, and the true version of his part in the "peace negotiations" with the rebel agents :- Commun. The hood ought to be read by the young men or the country, to whom Mr. Greeley's success is a noble teaching. Agents for the new edition for this county are in the field, and we commend them to the generous patronage of the people.

church at Wellsboro certainly has no reason to EPISCOPAL CHURCH.-We have received the subjoined communication touching the proposed division of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and very gladly lay it before the public :

This whole question of the Division of the Diocese is equivalent to determining whether or not the Episcopal Church in Central Pennsylvania shall advance or recede. The division movement is a progressive measure, and involves zeal and carnestness in missionary operations, the formation of new parishes in every town and village of any size, and general activity in all departments of church work. Failure to divide involves falling back into the old ruts, the decline of interest, and the mortifying spectacle of lagging behind every other religious organization. Can it be that our vestress and communicants will be content with the slow more at which we have content with the slow pace at which we have been advancing? Can it be that gentlemen of intelligence will be satisfied to see the church with which they are identified making so slight an impression upon the surrounding masses of the people?

Haven't we as a church in the past resembled too much the progress of the old stage coach which comes rumbling into town after the express trains have gone?

The day of better things will come with the passage of this division measure. Every vote against it is virtually a request to be let alone in the old ruts, while every vote in its favor is equivalent to a wish to press forward to better

It is hoped that the vestrymen who will have to decide this question will look at it in this its true light. Yours very truly, Lock Haven, Aug. 28, 1868. G. W. SHINN

Gossip.-Mankind has ever had an amiable weakness for heroes; but the world has not always been sagacious enough to know its true heroes in their lifetimes. Washington was not idolized in his lifetime. It was only when he died that men knew by the gloom which overspread the land that a bright star had fallen from the firmament of the young republic. Before the war of the rebellion the American people knew little of the heroes in their midst. How many mothers, five years later, were thrilled by the knowledge that they had suckled heroes no less than the mothers of Sparta! We have seen many of these heroes! and we never see one of them that we do not gather new hopes of the re-

-So, there came into our office the other day one of these heroes. Utilike the hero of a novel able speakers are expected to be present. he was not tall and commanding in person, nor was he one to remind you of the British lion or "Mansfield.—"Accidental" writes:

For this gallant act he was made color field. For this gallant act he was made color sergeant. How Philip Petty may feel about it we cannot tell! but we would rather own that discharge paper than le President. Philip Petty was born and reared in England, but offered his life for his adopted land. Is he not a here? ..... And he will yote for Grant & Colfor Solution. offered his life for his adopted land. Chemung County N. Y. -It so happens that some men ard miseducated into a state of helplessness painful to contemplate. In spite of the boast of the American people that class is not tolerated in this republic, there is a constant and seemingly irresistible tendency of the people to separate into classes. Among these classes is one composed of men and women who have been miseducated into a condition of help-lessness. They expect to be carried over all the rough places in life, and do not expect to pay for rough places in life, and do not expect to pay for transportation. They play in the role of pensioner upon the bounty of others. With the details of life they neither profess nor desire an acquaintance. They object to burdens of all sorts, demand that somebody go before to fling the stones out of the path, bruise the thorns off the roses, and level the hills. But these services they consider matters of course; and if asked to pay for them, put on an injured look, protest that such a thing is an insult, and so generally manage to get along without much trouble. This friend Frank Root is the publisher of the united may be right but we don't believe it. It is not papers; and may be considered on the high road christian, but selfishly pagan. No class has a to fortune. Frank is one of the best business right to exact special favor or claim unusual privilege. All must do their allotted part, and a quid pro quo is the entering wedge to a good inderstanding between men. -We have a word for young men; As you would shun deadly poison, rattlesnakes, and certain death from any cause whatever, avoid the man who never speaks well of women. The man, or semblance of a man, who professes to disbelieve in the virtue and integrity of woman as a sex; who lets no opportunity pass without sneering at her, and who makes her the subject of light and disrespectful remark-such a man is essentially vile, and moves, in an atmosphere as deadly to the morals of the young as carbonic acid gas is deadly to animal life. The parent who sends a boy into such an atmosphere knowingly, or subjects him to its baneful effects when apprised of it, directly connives at the moral destruction of his child, and is, to all practical tests, a murderer. Boys, avoid the company of obseene and profane men, though of advertisements and notices can be received for the twain obscenity is worse. Life is not long enough to unlearn the lessons of vice. Aim to be good and pure; avoid the appearance of evil; be manly; and when tempted to speak slightingly
