Although written to by her stricken friends, their letters never reached her, and a few weeks since she started for Elmira, her early home. Upon her ar-rival there she learned the address of her foster parents, with whom she at once communicated, giving them full self Democratic if the Republican and details of her experience since she had first bade them fare-well, upon set ing out for her western home. Their answer to her letter contained a statement of the terrible discovery of the identity of her husband and brother, together with an affectionate-invitation to come their home.

Heart-broken and nearly crazed by the strange denouement of her happy married life, the wretched woman hastened to accept the offer, and this morning will doubtless see her re-united with her earliest and dearest friends.
