First in the dusky dawn he sends abroad
His early secont, his emissary, smoke,
The satilest, latest pilgrim from his roof,
To feel the frosty sir, inform the day,
And, while he crouches still beside the hearth,
Nor musters courage to unbar the door,
It has gone down the glen with the light wind,
And o'er the plain unfarled its venturous wreath,
Draped the tree-tops, loitered upon the bill,
And warmed the pinions of the early bird;
And now, perchance, high in the crispy air,
Has caught sight of the day o'er the carth's edge,
And greets its master's eye at his low door, And greets its master's oyo at his low door.

(Continued from First Page.) and her husband were busy pacifying the angry woman, imploring not to ge them into trouble. She soon retired sullenly to hed, scowling fearfully at uduring the few moments we remained The detective's professional instinct fold-him, that had be attempted to pacify this flerce woman she would in a probability have become still more vio lent: He knew that these lodging house keepers are in the habit of exercising considerable influence over their lodgers.

As we emerged from one of these, places our attention was arrested by the sound of many footsteps, rapidly approaching. As we stepped off the pavement to allow the crowd to pass were shocked to see that they were carrying the apparently lifeless body of a woman. We stopped one of the crowd to ask what was the matter. "Oh, only a woman poisoned nerself; they're taking her to the hospital." And away our informant hurried, vexed to think that by stopping to answer our inquiry that by stopping to answer our inquiry his fascinated gaze upon this poor creature of misery had been for a moment interrupted. "Only a woman poisoned herself." Only a poor human being who tired of battling with a life of sorrow, unable any longer to make head against her sea of troubles, had though by self-destruction to put an, end to by self-destruction to put an oud to

While thinking over this scene, a per-fect mass of mud and tatters, with a baby in her arms, came up and stold a piteous tale of starvation and distress. How she had once had a home of her own show her husband had been in for months: how this one infsfortune had been the sole cause of their present condition. The wo nan's eye and chartering jaw told their own sad tale; she showed no apparent signs of being a drankard in fact her whole demeanor seemed to substantiate her statement. I asked her where she lodged. She replied that she lived in one of the anderground cellars. "Let me see you husband," I said. We followed her into a hovel in every way similar to those we had already visited, and a pitiable sight met our eyes. On one of those filthy bods lay a poor, emaclated fellow, who looked as though death would claim him in a few hours. My friend said to the woman, "It I give you some money, will you promise me not to spend a cent of it in drink?" She simply replied, "I will." He took a dollar bill from his pocket and placed it in her hand. She looked at it, and stared at it, she clutched it, and ejaculating "My God" with fearful emphasis, rushed up the steps into the street without offering any thanks. Her poor husband, in weak tones, apologized for herstrange behavior, saying, "We haven't seen the sight of so much money for weeks." This was certainly the most touching and heartrending scene we witnessed in our wanderings that the hight. The dellarges I feel was well

"I think, gentlemen," said the officer, "you ought to see one of the swell thieves, cribs, if we can manage it." We particularly wished to do so, and so started to visit the monarch of light-fingered ones. Our guide told us that we must exercise great caution, as we should be viewed with the utmost suspicion, and might find ourselves in hor water without a moment's warning. We descended a staircase into what was apparently a better-class oyster suloon, when a smart, well-dressed, in telligent-looking man came hurriedly forward to meet us. We were introduced to him with all the customary formalities of society. He received us with studied politeness, inquired particularly after, the state of our health. and, asking us what we would take, produced a bottle and a box of the most magnificent clears. As we were not allowe to pay for those little lux uries, I presume they cost him nothing. Seated at a round table were fourteen really well-dressed, gentlemanly-look-ingmen; they would have passed anywhere in society, so far as regards their personal appearance. These men are the most expert thieves in the whole country-so clever, so careful in al their little arrangements that the Police, though morally certain of their character, have never yet been able to bring anything home to them. Their purlaining transactions are carried on entirely through the agency of their tools. They were all talking, and talk-ing loudly; but so peculiar was their idiom that they were quite unintelligible to us, though it occurred to me afterward that a good deal of this might have been assumed, by way or blinding us to what they were really talking about.

these resorts are all compelled by law to be closed at 12 o'clock, we brought our excursion to a close. We thought, also, that we had seen enough of New-York after dark for expension to the constitution of the constitution. York, after dark, for one night, certainly enough to convince us that it is impossible for men to be men, or women be women, when they dwell to Water-st.

A community of Hive Bees contains but a single perfect female, termed the Queen: several hundred males, called Drones; and a bout twenty thousand neuters, or Workers. When then numbers increase, and there is more than one Qu'en Bee to each community, the Queens fight until there remainonly one to each. When the bees lose their Queen, they fill the vacant throne by a curious process. They select some one of the larvæ which are to be Workers, and enlarge its cell so as to make for it a suitable royal apartment. They then feed it with the royal jelly, which is the exclusive food of the Queen larvæ, and in due time this larvæ, originally destined to be a Worker, comes forth a Queen. "SANDING" THE SUGAR. -A resident in a certain village, having had sanded sugar sold him, inserted in a local paper
