principles by which we should be governed during the ordeal; and first, let erned during the ordeal; and first, let me premise, that personal bickerings between the different candidates, illy becomes persons asking office at our hands; and more despicable does it look when they resort to open slander and abuse. These things should not be countenanced in an intelligent community and it is to be based that only munity, and it is to be hoped that only an honorable spirit of rivalry will be indulged in by the numerous candidates before the people. It is not the province of this article to discuss the merits or qualifications of any of the candidates, nor to express a preference for one above another, only so far as relates to those who are to represent us in the General Assembly, and it seems hardly necessary to speak even in their behalf. That our district was ably represented in both branches of the last Legislature is unnecessary for me to affirm. If such is the fact, why should there be even a discounter when their productions are the such is the fact, why should there be even a discounter when their productions are the such as the even a dissenting voice to their return to a post from which they can illy be spared at the present time? When we carefully review the legislation of last winter, and the important measures introduced, discussed and finally acted upon by that body, we cannot but feel proud of the record made by the members from our county, a record that will last as long as our native common-wealth, as long as a single right is denied any human being and until eternal justice shall reign supreme in our bate, he gained the confidence and respect of both parties composing the House, is sufficient evidence of his fit-ness for the position; and I anticipate that when our convention shall assemble to make its nominations for the succeeding term, his services will be recognized by the unanimous vote of his constituen Of Hon. B. B. Strang, it seems almost presumptuous in me to say any thing. Every school-boy has become familiar with his name; and in our political circles it is as a household word and rallying point. Of his four years service as a member of the House of Representatives, it is unnecessary to give even a passing notice, were it not that we love to refer and point with pride to the actions and decids of great and good men. They make for us our history, how many such has our country produced whose record should be preserved upon brazen tablets.

It may be said and urged by some that Mr. Strang has had his share of position too long, so long as his career enures to the general benefit of the public, and people act but rashly when they exchange the services of a true

Olive Logan made, another speech the other day, at a woman's meeting in Brooklyn, in which she said: 'I reject live by their trade of politics—need not the trowsers with contempt and scorn. Men cut a sufficiently ridiculous figure in them themselves. The trouble is, they don't like their own costumes, pagiel for and are envious of our laces, jewelry, your swallow-tail coats, stove-pipe hats; and you wear your hair so short, some of you, that you look precisely like monkeys, and I don't wonder that one of your number has written a book showing that animal to be a father of his race.' sleep. Not so with governing. That is a different sort of thing. Agents, cannot be left to themselves as you leave your seed wheat and oats to the quickening forces of the earth. The ambitions of men are not to be considered. What are the petty ambitions of men in contrast with the greatest good to the whole people? Nothing; even less than nothing. Better that the whole horde ofselfish ambitions, which plague humanity and fill the earth with violence, be ignored and destroyed, than that the common interest should suffer by their gratification. The highest duty of the good citizen is to so cast his vote and influence that the appliances of Mr. D. S. It may not be much to the thoughtless and base whether affairs be administered with wisdom and economy, or for the enriching and aggrandizing of the agents employed; but it does matter to the masses, who must bear the blame of failure as the result of such trifling. If you would have government stable and beneficient you must see to it that the agencies of popular will are pure and patriotic. The possibility of a perman ent republic lies in the practical carry-

> It is fashionable to flatter the masses We shall do nothing of the kind. Every disasten every extravagance, every maladministration of affairs must be charged upon the masses. You cannot shake your fists at political hucksters and say: "You did it!" The people cannot shirk the consequences of their neglect. They are principals, bound by the acts of their agents, and when they follow one folly by another, and another, they become conspirators against the stability of order. Is it not high time that these evils were denounced and uprooted? Can a man who desires nothing so much as the success of free government remain silent while the masses carelessly smite at its life?

We shall not flatter the people. They are best served by the truth.
