The Agitator.
WELLBORO, PENNA.
WEDNESDAY, OCT. 13, 1869.

Gen. Steadman, Johnson's collector at New Orleans, is under arrest as a defaulter in the sum of $500,000. That ought to qualify him to run as a Democratic candidate for President in 1872.

Owing to the heavy storms along the Railroad lines last week, no New York mails reached Wellboro for five days. What would have been our condition without the Elmira Advertiser?—which came as often as every other day during the break.

The work goes nobly on. The Public debt was reduced during September $7,467,429.30. The total reduction during the seven months of Grant's administration foot up $56,968,187.00. Well, give us a few more years of Grant. A nation, like a man, is doing pretty well when it pays its debts. Roll on the ball.

The negligence of railway officials and employees was rebuked by Judge Barrett, of the Wayne District, at the Pike County Sessions. The engineer of the freight train which caused the Port Jarvis disaster was tried. The Judge charged pointedly against the negligence of the railway officials, and in ten minutes returned a verdict of Not Guilty. The Judge then addressed the jury in severe language, expressing the hope that the spirits of the victims of the accident would reproach them to the end of their days. Amen!

The meeting in the Court House last Wednesday evening was an occasion which will not soon be forgotten by the Republicans and Democrats present. Mr. McVeagh's speech was a model of terse, vigorous, consecutive reasoning, presented by an accomplished orator. It was an off-hand effort, consuming but an hour and a quarter in delivery. Yet it comprehended the history of parties for a period of forty-nine years, stated with a precision of sequence which was remarkable. Such an arrangement of the Democratic party has not been since in the Court House, or elsewhere in this region, since David Wilmore stood in the same place, thirteen years ago, and delivered his masterly indictment of that party for its high crimes and misdemeanors.

The house was densely crowded early in the evening. From first to last the eloquent speaker held complete control of the audience, now convulsing them with laughter by illustrative anecdote, and now raising the nobler emotions of patriotism, eliciting the most enthusiastic applause. And yet this speech was little more than an earnest of the capabilities of Mr. McVeagh, who, though young, has no superior in Pennsylvania either as an advocate in the Court, or as a defender of the political faith which sustains the souls and carries forward the standard of the Republican party.

Gen. Cameron was present, looking hale and vigorous. At the close of Mr. McVeagh's address, Judge Williams, the chairman of the meeting, arose, and alluding to the General in a few well-chosen words introduced him to the audience. He was received with enthusiastic applause; and after thanking the people for their friendship and support in the past and his flattering reception on that occasion, excused himself from speaking, and closed with an earnest exhortation to Republicans to stand by the principles of the party, which was loudly cheered.

The Wellboro Cornet Band added much to the enjoyment of the meeting. The audience separated after three cheers for the speakers, and three cheers for the Republican ticket.

RECAPITULATION.

1. Reduction of public debt
2. Amount of military expenses growing out of the rebellion
3. Amount of State tax on real estate reduced for 1866, 1867 and 1868

The above is taken from the report of the Auditor General, which are open to all persons. It is not necessary for honest men to be guessing nor for vilifiers to be guessing.

Go to the records, tell the truth, even if it should shame the vilest scoundrel in the land. I respectfully submit the foregoing as a creditable record of Republican administration. I respectfully invite a comparison of these eight years of Republican rule with the last period under Democratic sway.

In excavating for a sewer in Chicago, at a depth of eleven feet below the street, the workmen struck a coal swamp. Fragments of cedar trees, rotted away to almost nothing, were found in abundance, also layers of sand and rotten leaves, showing the annual fall of leaves and their covering by layers of drift sand. The layers underneath about ten to the inch. It is thought that a similar swamp existed about thirteen hundred years ago.

Have you heard the news from Maine? 10,000 Republican majority! Did you hear the thunder from Vermont? 20,000 Republican majority! Have you heard the shout from Nebraska? Everything swept by the Republicans! Did you hear the echo in Colorado? A Republican Legislature and Delegate to Congress! Thus the ball rolls on. Pennsylvania will swell the mighty reverberation, and economy, honesty, liberty and progress will have gained another mighty conquest.

A HERO.

On a certain Friday, not a month ago, a watchman at the Passaic-river draw-bridge, on the New York and Newark Railway, performed an act of heroism unexampled in the history of these heroic times. A passenger train was due, or nearly due, the draw was open, and the watchman was about to close it, when his little son, ten years old, playing near, fell from the bridge into the deep waters below. Just at this fearful moment the train came in sight. By leaving the draw partially open, the father might have saved his boy; and save a hundred, possibly more, lives, of people in whom he had no tender interest. Father, take the cue home to yourself for a moment—we need not comment. But this obscure keeper of the Passaic bridge chose quickly. He closed the draw. The boy drowned under his very eyes. The name of this hero is ALBERT G. DRECKER.

It is not probable that Albert G. Drecker would have believed himself capable of such an illustrious act of heroism an hour before it was performed. Men never know what they are capable of until they are tried. Six months before the rebellion broke out how many men would have said that the American people would rush to the field by hundreds of thousands at the call of the Government? It was supposed that the madness for accumulating had emasculated the people; that the spirit of heroism which illumines the history of the men who established the republic had been eliminated from the American character. The war dispelled that, with many other illusions. It proved that the masses of our citizens held their property and lives at the command of the republic. It also proved that that dangerous conservatism which strikes hands with evil rather than risk inconvenience, pertains to but a very few of the masses.

What shall be done to encourage and perpetuate such acts of heroism as that of Drecker? The world is at the feet of Ida Lewis, the daughter of the Newport Light-keeper. A noble woman, for as much heroism as did Abraham's. A man less devoted to duty would have suffered natural affection to control him in that awful moment, and a hundred men and women would have plunged into eternity without warning. Can the Railroad Company, and the passengers so saved from a fearful death, do less than place Albert G. Drecker in possession of worldly wealth enough to maintain him and his for life. Let it not be said that such a sacrifice as that was recognized only by the press; for though praise may be grateful to the best of men, it will not provide food for families, or shelter and protection from the frosts of age. If the government

GRANT'S NEPOTISM.—The Democratic howl about President Grant's nepotism is reduced at last to a piteous whine because of eight positions under the government which are distributed as follows:

Jesse R. Grant (father), postmaster, Covington.

A. H. Sharp (brother-in-law), marshal, D. C.

Fred T. Dent (brother-in-law), brigadier-general and door-keeper.

Casey (brother-in-law), collector.

Fred Grant (son), cadet, West Point.

Silas N. Hudson (cousin), minister to Guatemala.

Judge Dent (brother-in-law) administration candidate for governor of Mississippi.

Cramer (brother-in-law), recently consul to Leipzig.

And this statement comes from the New York World, the leading organ of the Democracy in the country. Let us see what the thing amounts to. Jesse R. Grant was post-master of Covington before Ulysses S. Grant became president. Fred T. Dent was advanced to his present military rank of lieutenant-colonel in the line on the 31st of December, 1867, and of brigadier-general by brevet on the 13th of March, 1869, both before Ulysses S. Grant was made President.

How often has the school-boy felt a quickening of the pulses when he has read the legend of Curtius who is said to have plunged in the gulf opened in the Roman Forum, because the oracle demanded the sacrifice of a noble to save Rome. Admitting the story to be true, Curtius gave himself to death to save Rome. How many thousands of nameless heroes gave their lives during the Revolution, that the birth of this republic might be assured! How many tens of thousands gave their lives during the rebellion, that the life of free institutions might be sustained! These were nameless heroes. It was not gain that attracted them to the sacrificial altar. If it was glory, then it was glory which was to ensue to a redeemed land.
