LUCK AND LAROR.—Indolent people are the only true disciples of luck, and luck alone is their god. They are always sure something 'is going to turn up' for their benefit, and therefore wait in idleness, with folding of hands, while the industrious, with strong and sharp will, go to work, and 'turn up something from the most unpromising materials.

Luck sleeps on the hope of a legacy to-morrow, breakfasts on disappoint-ment, and sits out the day in cold and hunger, still waiting for the fortune that labor achieves by sturdy blows and well directed efforts. The ringing ham-mer and the busy pen are laying the foundation of competence, while indolence fosters misery and crime.

Luck is simply the bantling of the most precarious chance, while labor is the all-powerful god of success, that overleaps every obstacle, and conquers the world in detail.

Luck whines. Labor whistles, Luck relies on the turn of a card: Labor on sturdy blows, and honesty of purpose. Luck steps downward to penury. Labor makes the outcast and the criminal .-Labor the man of substance and the Christian gentleman. Labor is despised by none but fools.— It is the true friend of rich and poor alike, and merits the humble duty of every son and daughter of God.

Two or three years ago a ministeral association met in one of the beautiful villages of the Connecticut Valley, Some earnest reformers among the brethren introduced resolutions condemning the use of tobacco. A certain Doetor of Divinity, who smokes as well as he preaches, to the surprise of all, warmly seconded the resolutions, but urged that they did not go far enough, that they did not reach the roots of the great will like it in the roots of the great evil. For if the use of tobacco was a sin, then the raising of tobacco was a sin, and all those who received their support from money obtained by the raising of tobacco were under same condemnation; all must be included in the resolutions, it would be obviously wrong to make any distinctions. These suggestions knocked the resolutions in the head; for were not many of the best men presented en-gaged in tobacco culture? and were not some of the clergymen present receiving their salary from such culture? The vote did not pass, and the "D. D." still smokes and still preaches, and tobacco still grows in the Valley of the Con-

A case of local interest was brought before him and the judgement given excited the inspecies present. His delight was too great to be repressed and he burst out:
"(lo it; old gimlet eye!"

"Who was that?" said the judge very quickly.
"I'm the old hoss," said the man rising in the expetation of being coplimented on his perspicuity. "Constable," said the judge, quickly, "take that hoss and put him in the

There flourishes in a flourishing village of Western New York a Mrs.—, one of those good-natured people who have a generous scorn of details, and believe on all occasions in giving a good effect to their conversation. At, one of the periodic tea-parties to which the village is subject she was entertaining the company with an account of a mos astonishing hog which her' father had fatted to the enormous weight of six thousand pounds!—Quite a murmur of surprise went round the room, during which her husband suggested. "Oh no, my dear, it was six hundred "Why, Jeremiah," said he, in disgust, "the skin weighed that!"

It is a well-known fact that no animal is more difficult to kill than a shark. One of these monsters of the deep was captured by the crow of the French elipper "Rossignol," on its last cruise; and being brought on deck, was made fast by the head and tail. The captain thereupon ordered some of the most experienced hands to rip it from the lower jawbone to the tail with sharp knives, and to take out its heart, lungs, liver and entrails. This done, it was cast into the sea again, through which it swam with so much velocity that in a few seconds it was lost sight of. Although it could not possibly live long in this condition. it apparently swam with as much ease and energy as it did before receiving its
