A PICTURE.

'Tis the half profile of a fair young girl,—
A type of purity and loveliness,
Of perfect modesty and lowliness,
From thoughtful brow to rose-enwreathed curl;—

A priceless diamond, and a perfect pearl,
That claims my gaze and charms my loneliness.
What wonder that King Arthur's Knights could press
To tilt and tournament, and headlong hurl
Their steeds, themselves, their well-earned, much-loved fame,
To overthrow and ruin, for the chance
To win one smile from eyes that put to shame
The light of stars! One tender, loving glance
From eyes like these were worth a hero's name,
A life's devotion,—a crusader's lance.

A. T. Stewart, The Great New York Merchant.

Having attained his majority, Mr. Stewart who had previously emigrated to this country, made preparations to return to Ireland to receive his patrimony, upon the interest of which he had been living.

'How much is your patrimony?' asked Mr. Chambers, a gentleman then well known as a buyer at auctions for several business firms, and to whom he had stated his intended return to Ireland and the object of his going.

'About $10,000 I suppose,' said Mr. Stewart.

'A snug little sum. What do you propose doing with it?'

'Reinvest here and live on the income.'

'You can do better.'

'How?'

'Go into trade.'

'Nonsense; I know nothing about trade. I have a horror of trade. I can't even buy a hat or a pair of gloves without getting some one to pick them for me.'

'Stuff,' ejaculated Mr. Chambers, impatiently. 'Do as I tell you. Go to Belfast, buy insertions and scollop trimmings. Spend all your money in them, and you'll double your money.'

'If I ever buy these goods,' said Mr. Stewart, 'you shall have the profits.'

Mr. Stewart went to Ireland. It was a forty days' voyage. There was only one cabin passenger besides himself, and on the fare of dry biscuit and musty bread they like to have starved.

But at length the voyage ended, he reached his native town, saw his guardian and received his patrimony. It was only $5,000, half the expected sum. The guardian, as guardians were given to do in those days, had speculated on his ward's money and lost. He went to Belfast. Passing through High St., he recalled his conversation with Mr. Chambers. It occurred to him that he had not the remotest idea what insertions or scollop trimmings were. Seeing a small store and a woman behind the counter he went in.

'Do you keep insertions?' he quickly asked.

'Yes, sir,' politely said the shopwoman. 'Here is some,' and she handed him a piece, which he proceeded to examine.

'How much is it a yard?' inquired Mr. Stewart.

'One shilling.'

'I take a quarter of a yard,' and this quantity was quickly served from the piece. A very similar dialogue ensued in regard to the scollop trimmings, and with the same result, Mr. Stewart buying a quarter of a yard of this also.—Mr. Stewart now saw what insertions and scollop trimmings were. It occurred that he had not gone to work, however, exactly in the right way to carry out the plan of Mr. Chambers.

'Can you sell me these goods any cheaper if I buy considerable quantities of each?' he inquired of the shopwoman.

'How much do you wish to buy?'

'A thousand pounds' worth.'

'Oh my, sir; you had better go to Mr. Workman's the manufacturer,' said the shopwoman, and she directed him the way to go.

To Mr. Workman's Mr. Stewart went. His £1,000 was soon exchanged for insertions and scollop trimmings. Mr. Stewart soon arrived in New York bringing with him the product of his purchases.

'I invested my patrimony as you wished me to,' said Mr. Stewart to Mr. Chambers.

'You have done just the thing,' spoke up Chambers, with a lively burst of enthusiastic joy. 'Scarcely any of these goods are in the market. They are in great demand: sure to double the money I laid for them. Where are the goods?'

'Bought them on the ship with me!'

'Lucky, we'll open a store at once.'

'What do you mean by we?'

'You and I will be partners of course.'

'Not at all,' answered Mr. Stewart: 'you sell the goods I bought, pay me back my $5,000, and that's all I ask or expect. I bought them for your accommodation and not to make anything for myself.'

It is unnecessary to pursue this dialogue. Mr. Chambers would not listen to anything less than sharing the profits with Mr. Stewart. He insisted further that they should open a store, together, and that Mr. Stewart should be salesman, while he would buy other goods at auction for the establishment. This programme of business finally agreed upon, the next thing was to get a store. They looked through Pearl and Hudson streets, but could find no place to suit them, the principal objection being the high rents asked. Finally a bill "To let" upon the door of No. 283 Broadway attracted their notice. The rent on inquiry was found to be $375 a year. For some time they pondered over the expediency of assuming such a high rent. The man who had just vacated the place had failed, and this made them extra cautious. They decided to take the store.

What followed in the course of years is shown by Mr. Stewart being now worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

A MOTHER'S WORDS:—A youth of eighteen or nineteen years of age sat at an open window—a look of painful perplexity in his face, apparently occasioned by a letter he held in his hand. After sitting thus for some moments, he muttered to himself:

"Yes, I must go; if I don't Brown and Smith will be laughing at me, and call me righteous overmuch; and after all, there's no great harm in it, for I'll go to church in the morning, and it's only to be a sail down the river and spend the day in the country."

Still, he pressed his hand on his forehead for an instant, then rising hastily, he said:

"There is no use bothering about it: I must go."

As he rose, his eye lighted on the setting sun, and it did so his whole expression changed; a sweet, yet sad look played on his face—his thoughts were elsewhere—another scene was before his eyes. The dark street had disappeared, and in its stead a neat country cottage had risen. In thought, he was there. Once more he saw the hills that rose near the door; once more the blue waters of the lake glistened before him; once more he sat in the cottage garden with his widowed mother and watched the setting sun.

Once more that mother's words sounded in his ears—"John, don't forget your God, and He'll not forget you." Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Though sinners entice you to break it, consent thou not. O when you're tempted to do wrong don't forget to pray. Never let the sun go down on a prayerless day. May the God of the fatherless guide you—may the Lord Jesus Christ be your Saviour!"

Yes, six months had passed since he heard those words, and yet they seemed to sound in his ears. Tears filled his eyes; he folded his hands kneeled in prayer; then taking his pen he wrote:

"Thanks, Brown, for your invitation; but I cannot accept it. My duty now is to obey his commands; and He hath said: Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Spending the day in idle pleasure, is not doing this; and I wish you would think over the subject and not go yourself."

TO THE FARMERS OF TIOGA COUNTY.

I AM now building at my manufactory, in Lawrenceville, a superior

FANNING MILL,

which possesses the following advantages over all other mills:

1. It separates rye, oats, rat litter, and foul seeds, and chess and cockle, from wheat.
2. It cleans flax seed, takes out yellow seed, and all other seeds, perfectly.
3. It cleans timothy seed.
4. It does all other separating required of a mill.

This mill is built of the best and most durable timber, in good style, and is sold cheap for cash, or produce.

I will fit a patent stove, for separating oats from wheat, to other mills, on reasonable terms.

T. A. WICKHAM,

TIOGA, PA.

HAVING obtained the agency from the manufacturers of the above named instruments we have the facilities for furnishing them at prices to compare favorably with those of dealers in either the same or other reed instruments. Their reputation is such that scarcely anything need be said regarding their being desirable, having been awarded premiums and medals at the principal Fairs and Institutes, both in this and foreign countries. Many fine modern improvements, which are so desirable in all good reed instruments, are owned and retained for their exclusive use by the manufacturers of these instruments. Hence it is, while they claim strength and durability, together with volume, and quality of tone equal to any, they excel all other reed instruments, in the variety and combination of tones which can be produced.

INDIVIDUALS, SCHOOLS, CHURCHES, SOCIETIES, and other organizations, wishing to obtain a good instrument, can be suited as regards size stylee, prices, &c., &c.

ALL INSTRUMENTS WARRANTED.
